Trade Treaty Between U. S. And Britain Is Imminent

Call to Negotiations Due Momentarily in Reply to Fascist Moves.

Political Meaning To Rival Economic

English-Speaking World Would Be United in Peace 'Front.'

By Felix Morley.
Copyright, 1937, by The Washington Post.

The keystone for the arch of trade agreements which the Administration has been building for over three years is about to be swung into position by announcement of the beginning of formal negotiations for such an agreement with Great Britain.

Developments yesterday indicate that the official statement to this effect may now be expected almost momentarily.

The forthcoming announcement, though it will be couched in the identical language used for all the thrade agreements, is regarded as having even more political than economic importance. Coming coincident with the co-operation shown at the Brussels Conference it is held to be further evidence that the two great democracies can form a united front where their common interests are concerned.

The agreement, though much remains to be done before its completion, is in the nature of a reply both to the alliance recently concluded between Germany, Italy and Japan, and to the Brazilian move to form a Fascist state.

Dominions Would Be Next.

Speaking before the League of Nations Assembly, on September 20, Anthony Eden took pains to stress the world-wide importance of the proposed Anglo-American accord. Such a trade agreement, said the British Foreign Minister, would "be one of the most effective steps (for peace) we could take."

It is significant that immediately after Mr. Eden's remarks, renewed overtures looking toward a German-American trade agreement were received in Washington from Berlin. The United States has no trade agreement with either Germany, Italy or Japan, the closed economy of these totalitarian states making fruitful negotiations very difficult.

A large part of the importance of the pending agreement with Great Britain lies in the probability that it will not stop there. The logic of the situation indicates that an accord with Great Britain might quickly lead to trade agreements with Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, as well as to another agreement with Canada, supplementary to the one concluded just two years ago. And there are indications that a supplementary Canadian agreement might prove of even greater commercial importance than the one now in force.

South America Watching.

Nor does the orbit of the negotiations with London stop short with the British dominions. There is good reason to anticipate that latent negotiations with the Argentine Republic and Uruguay will be revived as a natural sequel to an accord with another predominantly agricultural nation, such as Australia.

Any current renewal of trade negotiations with Latin-American countries will also have considerable political significance. The advent of a totalitarian regime in Brazil has made the Administration the more anxious to strengthen and extend the system of trade treaties in the New World, feeling that this is one of the best ways to block the spread of fascism there. The recent action of Uruguay, putting a temporary ban on the import of all American automobiles and automotive products, has stimulated this anxiety, though it is recognized that the Montevideo government took Woman Says She Meant Only to Scare Him But Gun Discharged in Scuffle; Boy, 13, Suffers Head Injuries.

By Jean Brownell.

Because a hit-run truck struck down 13-year-old Johnny Hughes near his home in Fairfax County, Johnny's father was dead yesterday and his mother was charged with shooting him.

Carl H. Hughes, 40, proprietor of a dry cleaning establishment in Alexandria, was shot to death by his wife, Kathleen Hughes, 35, as the climax of a quarrel over who was responsible for Johnny's injury, Mrs. Hughes said yesterday. The quarrel took place in the combination grocery store and clapboard house five miles from Alexandria the Hugheses called home.

Bond for Mrs. Hughes was set at $2,500 on a charge of "felonious shooting resulting in death." An inquest will be held in Alexandria.

According to Mrs. Hughes, her husband was drinking. She said the three of their children then at home had left the house because they were afraid of their father when he was drinking.

"He blamed me for Johnny getting hurt," Mrs. Hughes said. "He said if I had been at home and watching him, he would be all right now.

"I told him it was just an accident; that it might happen any time.

"Then he grabbed a stick and threw it at me. I ran to my dresser where he always kept his gun and got it out just to scare him. That Door Forever Closed.

By the Associated Press.

Brussels, Nov. 16.—Faced by Japan's declaration that the Brussels conference closed "forever" the door to mediation of the war in China, Ambassador Norman H. Davis, head of the United States delegation, turned to Russian envoys today for conferences on the next stage of the conference.

A Japanese embassy statement criticized the powers at the conference, particularly Russia, and said the condemnation of Japan yesterday was not "worthy of being published in the name of the conference." It said that Japan left the way open for mediation in her reply to the conference's peace bid last Friday, but that no effort had been made to pursue the matter.

Davis, to whom the other delegates were reported looking for leadership when the conference reconvenes Monday, conferred with Vladimir P. Potemkin, head of the Soviet delegation. He was expected to see the British and French representatives later in the week.

Russian circles saw as an attempt to drive a wedge between the United States and other powers the Japanese reference to the part played in framing the condemnation by nations which "repudiated payment of their debts to the United States."

Railroads Want I. C. C. Ordered To Raise Rates

By Franklyn Waltman.

As Administration figures quietly worked behind the scenes in an effort to find ways to stimulate purchasing power of the Nation's railroads, R. V. Fletcher, general counsel of the Association of American Railroads, yesterday called on Congress to issue formal instructions to the Interstate Commerce Commission to recognize the right of the carriers to rates sufficient to give them a return on the value of their property.

Fletcher contended Congress should make a declaration, in the form of instructions to the I. C. C. that "the railroads are entitled to earn a sufficient amount of money to pay their operating expenses and, in addition thereto, there should be a substantial return upon the value of the property."

The railroad spokesman's declaration, made in a speech delivered before the Transportation Club of Peoria, Ill., but also released here by the rail association, struck at the heart of the railroad problem as viewed by many within the Administration, namely, some means to get the I. C. C. to recognize the need of the railroads for additional

Board to Back Camp Springs Airport Bill

D. C. Commission Decides to Join Fight for House Passage.

By James D. Secrest.

The Washington Airport Commission decided yesterday to place the influence of its members behind a movement to get the House to approve the Camp Springs Airport bill passed by the Senate last session.

At the same time, Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, who refused to sign the commission report last summer, disclosed his intention of sponsoring another measure to close Military road so that the Washington Airport can expand its field.

Nichols stated, however, that he would not offer the Washington Airport bill until after the House has passed the Camp Springs measure.

President Roosevelt vetoed the Copeland-May bill, which would have allowed the airport to close Military road and extend its runways into the Department of Agriculture experimental farm. At the same time, however, he gave tacit approval of the Camp Springs project and gave renewed hope to Gravelly Point supporters by suggesting that it might be developed as a secondary field.

Senator King (Democrat), Utah, who called the informal meeting, said that it was decided that as the commission had recommended the Camp Spring site and none other, that it should not at this time broaden its objective.

Passage Predicted.

Nichols said he today will ask the House leaders to allow the Camp Spring bill to be called up as soon as posible. He predicted that it will be passed.

The Oklahoman reiterated the opinion that the National Capital should have two airports.

"Meanwhile, airliners have to have a place to land," he said, "and there's only one place around here they can do that now and that's Washington Airport.

"It seems perfectly ridiculous to me that Congress should not agree to let the owners of Washington Airport spend their own money to develop it if we authorize the closing of Military road.

"This is particularly true when that development would convert the airport from an unsafe to a safe flying field."

Shaw Rewrites Shakespeare And Puts Windsor Drama in It

By the Associated Press.

London, Nov. 16.—George Bernard Shaw tonight carried out his old threat to rewrite Shakespeare—and in doing so he introduced an obvious allusion to former King Edward's abdication.

A "streamlined" version of Cymbeline, rewritten in part by Shaw, was presented at the Embassy Theater.

Never self-effacing Shaws' program said, "Cymbeline: by William Shakespeare and George Bernard Shaw."

Shaw worked in the abdication in a rewritten passage where the Kings' long lost sons, Cadwal and Polydore, are found. Cadwal, the elder, is hailed as the heir to the British throne.

But Cadwal replies in blank verse:

"No, no! This kingly business has no charms for me . . . compelled to worship priest-invented gods,
"Not free to wed the woman of my choice,
"Being stopped at every turn by some old fool
"Crying: 'You must not,' or still worse: 'You must.'
"O, no, sir: Give me back the dear old cave!
"I abdicate, and pass the throne to Polydore."

Polydore exclaims:

"Do you by heavens? Thank you for nothing, my brother!"

Shaw commented, "You must not try to find in the passage more than there is on the surface."

Critics were not at all sure Shaw had made good his boast he would "improve Shakespeare."

New Hearing On Pay-Hour Bill Sought

Questioning of Lewis, Green and Secretary Perkins Suggested.

Mrs. Norton Summons Committee to Study Future Action.

By Sidney Olson.

In a desperate effort to find a new basis for agreement of the much-beleagured wages-hours bill, a House leader recommended last night to Labor Committee Chairman Mary T. Norton (Democrat), New Jersey, that she call before her committee at the earliest possible moment John L. Lewis, William Green and Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins.

Lewis and Green, respectively, head the rival Committee for Industrial Organization and American Federation of Labor.

The three are to be asked to restate their attitudes toward the bill in the light of present circumstances, and to make recommendations, if they have any, which might be either incorporated in the present bill or used in shaping a substitute measure.

Chairman Norton will ask the advice of her committee at an emergency session at 10:30 a. m. today on the plan to invite the three.

O'Connor Spurred Move.

The move sprang directly from the point raised by House Rules Committee Chairman John O'Connor, of New York, yesterday, when he said:

"Who wants the bill, anyway? Chairman Norton wants it changed so that the Labor Standards Board would go under the Department of Labor. Secretary Perkins said at the White House that she has a lot of changes to suggest. Bill Green isn't satisfied with it. Probably John Lewis has some ideas.

"I seem to be the only one who's for the bill.

"I resent the statement that the wages-hours bill is locked up in the Rules Committee, in view of these circumstances.

"The President's message, even, wasn't very enthusiastic about this legislation."

Meanwhile, Chairman Norton filed with the Speaker her petition to discharge the Rules Committee from consideration of the pending bill.

In the brief session yesterday, 44 signatures were obtained.

Several leaders privately expressed definite pessimism yesterday that the necessary 218 signatures will be obtained.

No changes were visible yesterday in the Rules Committee line-up against the bill.

Freeze to Strike Capital Tonight; Rain in Afternoon

Freezing temperature will strike Washington late today, according to a forecast by the Weather Bureau. An earlier forecast of snow was changed.

Rain was the prediction for this afternoon, with below freezing temperature in the early hours of the morning. Car owners were warned to fill radiators with antifreeze solutions in advance.

Yesterday's high reading was 49 degrees, recorded at 3 p. m., with a low of 40 degrees at 5 a. m.

Maryland's first general snow and coldest weather of the fall were predicted by Weatherman John R. Weeks at Baltimore. The storm will be accompanied by strong winds.

Meanwhile the Great Lakes region and the Missouri Valley reported heavy snow throughout most of yesterday with a prediction of colder weather for today. Heavy snows also fell in some parts of Kansas.

Lynching Bill Meets Filibuster in Senate; Adams Moves Tax Cut

20 Democrats Ask Immediate Action

Coloradan Would Hang Revenue Cuts on Publicity Repeal.

A Senate maneuver to write modifying business tax changes into an obscure pending revenue measure was disclosed yesterday as demands for relief from undivided profits taxation reached landslide proportions in the Senate.

Twenty Democratic Senators voiced pleas for either "immediate action" or undivided profits tax modification as soon as is possible under regular legislative procedure. Eight of those seeking repeal or revision "at the earliest possible moment" are members of the Senate Finance Committee, which handles Senate tax legislation.

Meantime, Senator Alva B. Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, adroitly paved the way for possible early action by moving to amend a revenue measure that already has passed the House and is on the Senate calendar.

Publicity Bill Used.

Under the Constitution the House must originate revenue legislation, but once the revenue laws are opened to amendment in the Senate, that chamber may amend them at will.

Adams proposed broad modifying changes as a rider on H. R. 6215, a House bill repealing publicity provisions of the 1936 revenue law, which permitted publication of corporate salaries in excess of $1,000.

The Coloradan said he will move later to call up the bill for consideration, and propose the amendments he introduced yesterday.

The Adams proposals would repeal the undivided profits tax on portions of corporate net income used for plant expansion and improvements, or for replacement of property damaged by floods or fires, or for corporate debt retirement payments. In addition, Adams proposed that companies be "rewarded" for plant expansion and salary increases by being allowed to deduct 10 per cent from all earnings spent for this purpose from their normal corporate income tax base.

Other Proposals Made.

"Let us say to private industry, 'We are going to encourage you to go ahead instead of penalizing you,'" said Adams. "We are asking private employers to take up the employment slack, but how can they do it unless we encourage them to make use of their productive capital in a manner that would create jobs?"

While the House tax sub-committee was at work on tax revision for action at the January session, a host of other modifying proposals were laid down in the Senate as a basis for earlier action, or were in process of preparation. These included:

An amendment by Senator Smathers (Democrat), New Jersey, allowing a credit of 20 per cent of the net income used for additional working capital, for plant improvements and expansion. An additional credit of 10 per cent which could be set aside for business recessions, un-

Byrnes and Connally Keep Bill Off Floor by Speeches.

House, Also, Gets No Work Started

Committees of Both Chambers Continue Farm Aid Drafting.

By Robert C. Albright.

A Congress with nothing before it but controversial secondary measures and an anti-lynching bill not on the President's program commenced time-killing filibuster yesterday and balked leadership efforts to hold it in leash.

Marking time while committees struggled to draft a farm bill, the Senate fell into rousing discord over whether to call up the Government reorganization or anti-lynching bills and ended by filibustering a motion to consider the latter.

The House, with no bills to consider, met for less than an hour and blocked a leadership effort to adjourn until Friday, by a single Republican objection. A roll call vote of the House was forced before leaders could adjourn until noon today, when again no business is scheduled.

Byrnes Holds to Floor.

A one-day filibuster by Southern Senators prevented Senate action on a motion to make the Wagner-Van Nuys anti-lynching bill the first order of business, after leaders had vainly sought backstage to compose differences between anti-lynching and reorganization bill advocates.

Denied recognition to call up the omnibus reorganization bill, Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, held the floor throughout the Senate's "morning hour" (actually two hours), the only period when a motion to vote is not debatable.

This forestalled the anti-lynching bloc's only opportunity for an immediate vote on their right-of-way motion. When Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), of New York, finally submitted the anti-lynching motion, the filibuster was taken up by Senator Tom Connally, Texas Democrat.

Then for nearly three hours Connally held the floor. About two hours of this was consumed by the clerk's reading of an April, 1935, speech by Associate Justice Hugo L. Black (former Alabama Senator), in opposition to the anti-lynching bill. The speech was read at Connally's request. He said the Black speech offered a "sort of a prejudgment opion" on the anti-lynching bill while the Alabaman was a Senator.

Asks Farm Bill First.

Connally argued Congress was not summoned back by the President to consider anti-lynching legislation, but to consider a farm bill and four other measures. His drawling shafts at the Chair and at anti-lynching bill Senators brought constant gavel poundings from the rostrum, warnings against "personalities" and threats to "clear the galleries."

The Texan insisted he was not "talking to the galleries" and called on the Chair to enforce the rule "against someone saying Ha! Ha! in the galleries," adding: "But if it's a solemn rule to take up the farm bill and then the anti-lynching bill later, why then, to hell with it." He said the President wanted Congres to "address itself first to farm legislation," and not the anti-lynching measure.

Battle Over Control.

But the farm bill was not ready, and leaders saw little prospect of a final farm bill draft before next week. Off the floor, Senator Ellison

Supreme Court Asked to Rule on Authority Of Commissioners to Revoke Driving Permits

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Powers of the District Commissioners to suspend or revoke drivers' permits for speed offenses was challenged yesterday in the United States Supreme Court.

Contending the suspension statute "embraces an unconstitutional delegation of authority to the Commissioners or their designated agents," Alfred M. Laforest, 1737 W street northwest, filed the petition after his license was withheld 15 days on a 36-mile-an-hour speed conviction.

His action followed closely a United States Court of Appeals decision Monday granting the Commissioners full power to control traffic through special regulations and upholding the controversial "snow removal" parking restriction.

The Laforest petition charges also "that the traffic situation in the District of Columbia is in a very poor state of control."

"But an abusive power, unrestricted and unlimited," the petition read, "is not a cure for such a situation."

The regulation governing permit suspensions or revocations for first or subsequent offenses of speeding was adopted by the Commissioners January 17, 1936.

"Since that time," said Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer yesterday, "the suspension rule has proved one of our most effective weapons in penalizing motorists and bringing a degree of safety to Washington streets."

Meanwhile, the Court of Appeals "snow removal" parking opinion was received by motorists and traffic leaders with mingled reactions.

Although admitting the night parking ban—from 2 a. m. until 8 a. m.—inflicts hardships on many motorists, Col. L. C. Crawford, chairman of the Board of Trade traffic committee, said he felt the Appellate Court's ruling was "right, just and reasonable."

The Keystone Automobile Club, through its manager, George Keneipp, predicted profiteering among garage and parking lot owners should the ban extend to all parts of the city, while Russell Singer, general manager of the American Automobile Association, cited Washington's need for additional off-street parking facilities.

Light Company Says City Plants Would Ruin It

Supreme Court Brief Contends U. S. Financing Acts Are Invalid.

By the Associated Press.

The Alabama Power Co. told the Supreme Court yesterday the concern's business in four municipalities would be destroyed if the Federal Government were permitted to finance competing, publicly-owned electric plants.

It contended also in a brief that the 1935 emergency relief appropriation act and a portion of the national industrial recovery act were unconstitutional, if construed to permit Federal loans and grants for electric projects.

The brief was filed as a prelude to verbal arguments December 6 on the power company's suit to enjoin the Government from furnishing funds to Decatur, Hartselle, Guntersville and Russellville, Ala.

Fear Losing Customers.

Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War, and other attorneys contended in the document that the company had a "right to conduct its business free from interference and injury from public officials acting without authority in law."

They contended the officials "proposed to authorize and finance as Federal Public Works projects electric distribution systems which are designed and intended to and will supplant petitioner's facilities and take all of petitioner's customers in the four towns."

Gold Fight Renewed.

Arthur Machen, of Baltimore, holder of a $1,000 First Liberty Bond, insisted in a brief filed with the court that so long as the Government "persists in its refusal to pay in gold coin," it cannot redeem the bond before the maturity date.

Massachusetts and California presented opposing contentions in arguments before the court over whether two or more States can impose inheritance taxes on the same estate.

James J. Roonan, assistant attorney general of Massachusetts, argued a Federal District Court should be permitted to determine the domicile of the person leaving the estate, while George S. Fuller, for California, contended such action would entail a suit against the State prohibited by the eleventh amendment.

Maverick Requests Farm Bills First

By the Associated Press.

Representative Maverick (Democrat), Texas, demanded last night that Congress get down to "brass tacks" on the Administration's legislative program and let "this taxation business" wait.

The welfare of millions of farmers, he said in a broadcast address, "is more important than taxes on a tiny minority of big business men."

Rather than get hysterical over tax revision, Maverick said, Congress should enact farm, wage and hour, Government reorganization and regional planning bills. He said he had returned to the Capital to find confusion and lack of purpose and organization.

"Worse," he added, "we find scared people, scared politicians—bragging and arrogant tories who say contemptuously that they are out to get Roosevelt. "To me that only means they are out to get the American people."

Swope and Young Paid $146,500 Each

By the Associated Press.

Salaries of $146,500 for Owen D. Young and Gerard Swope, chairman and president, respectively, of the General Electric Co., topped a list of 1936 corporation salaries made public yesterday by the Securities Commission.

The commission made public salary lists of six corporations, including General Electric, after denying requests that the lists be kept confidential.

Radio Station Sought For Peace Promotion

By the Associated Press.

Thomas J. Watson, wealthy industrialist, asked the Communications Commission yesterday for permission to establish a radio station "to promote the cause of education and world peace."

The silver-haired manufacturer testified at a hearing on his application for a station to be built at Endicott, N. Y. The application was opposed by the Citizens Broadcasting Corporation, Schenectady, N. Y., and a group of other stations.

Watson said he believed there was a growing demand for more educational and cultural programs on the air.

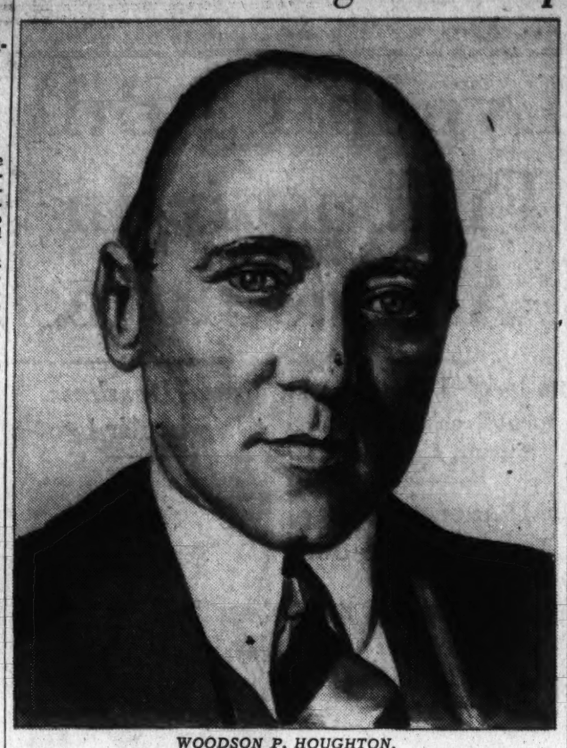
Underpass for Dupont Circle Is Issue Facing Civic Group



WOODSON P. HOUGHTON.

By Christine Sadler.

How to take care of all the automobiles that find historic Dupont Circle between them and places they want to go, and yet preserve the appearance of a vicinity that makes the society pages almost as often as Capitol Hill makes the political columns——

That has been an unsolved problem of the District Highway Department for longer than many people can remember. Everything from subways to a horse and buggy revival has been suggested. Last year Congress entered the picture, donated some money, and told the department to survey its way out of a difficult situation.

The survey proved to the department that an underpass is the solution. According to its plan, Dupont Circle will not be elevated, but Connecticut avenue—just about as historic and every bit as swanky—will be lowered. All Maryland traffic shooting out that thoroughfare will travel under the big fountain that in 1921 replaced the statue of Admiral Samuel F. du-Pont, Civil War leader, who gave the area his name. Before the statue, put up in 1884, the area was Pacific Circle.

Needless to relate, the Dupont Circle Citizens Association is very much concerned about the underpass proposal. Woodson P. Houghton, new president of the body, considers it one of the most momentous issues raised in the section in a long time.

Will Report on Plan.

A committee is studying the plan and will report at the next meting. If the association then votes against the idea, the highway department will find itself in another situation; for the Dupont Circle citizens make up one of the best organized nd most effective groups in the District.

Houghton feels sure that "if the underpass is going to be effective and satisfactory the association wants it." A proper solution of the Dupont Circle traffic troubles would be of extreme benefit to the area, in his opinion.

The association long has been interested in traffic problems, in reducing traffic noises, in zoining to keep its area residential, and is on the record as opposed to local suffrage.

"We propose to keep hammering away for a quieter city," Houghton says.

His group this winter will take under careful consideration the business privilege tax, the budget, and the whole question of taxation in the District. He believes that these are some things we all have to get together and solve. "If we do not do it this year," he declares, "we will have to do it some other time."

Born in Georgetown.

The new president of the Dupont group succeeds the late Demarest Lloyd. He was born in Georgetown and, with exception of the years he attended Washington and Lee University and served as first lieutenant in the Judge Advocate general's department during the World War, has lived in Washington all his life. After the war, during which he was located at Newport News as assistant port judge advocate, he began to practice law as a member of the firm of Ellis, Houghton, Ellis.

Although he has been engaged in active practice since that date, he has found time to become prominently identified with civic and charitable work of the city. He worked to get the Community Chest started in Washington and is vice president of the Family Service Association, which was formerly the Associated Charities.

With him civic work is not a hobby, but part of his duty. He thinks that the voteless citizens of Washington have—indirectly—a lot of influence.

Served in Lesser Posts.

He "worked his way up" in the Dupont group, having served formerly as secretary and vice president. The secretaryship is probably the hardest job in the organization, he thinks, because of the very thorough manner in which activities are recorded. He is married and lives at 1331 Eighteenth street, northwest.

The Dupont Circle Association has more than 200 "paid up" members and its meetings are well attended. It is the one citizens' association that meets in the afternoon—each first Monday at the Mayflower Hotel.

On Friday—Mrs. Elizabeth Draper, president of the Progressive Citizens Association, will be next in the "Working for Washington" series.

G. W. U. Dean to Speak.

Prof. William C. Johnstone, dean of the Junior College, George Washington University, will speak at 8:30 p. m. today before the Institutes of the Jewish Community Center. His topic will be, "The Present State of European Politics-Progress or Retrogression." Dr. Abram Simon will be chairman.

Hospital Guild to Meet.

Miss Bessie Baker, formerly of Opportunity House, will address the November meeting of the Women's Guild of Sibley Memorial Hospital at 11 a. m. tomorrow in Rust Hall at the hospital. The women of St. Paul's M. E. Church South, will act as hostesses.

Senators Ask Aid of Wallace On Farm Bill

By the Associated Press.

Senate farm leaders called in Secretary Wallace yesterday to help clarify the confused crop control situation.

A dispute between Senate and House sub-committees on cotton regulations appeared likely to delay the whole Administration program for ten days.

Chairman Smith (Democrat), South Carolina, shouting determination to call the Senate Agriculture Committee together every day "and nights and Sunday, too, if necessary," to get out a bill, announced a conference today with the Secretary.

"We've asked Wallace and his crowd up here to explain just what all these farm bills mean," he said.

Jumping the gun on the committee, Senator Ellender (Democrat), of Louisiana, introduced in the Senate a proposal for tobacco marketing quotas to become effective on a two-thirds referendum vote of the producers. He said he would make a similar proposal for rice.

A House Agricultural sub-committee headed by Representative Fulmer (Democrat), of South Carolina, brought out a "voluntary" control program for cotton. It went to the full committee for inclusion, if approved, in a House farm bill.

On the other hand, a special committee of Southern Senators went to work on a rigidly compulsory control law. The group was headed by Senator Bankhead (Democrat), author of the proposal.

There appeared to be only one slight chance that the Senate and House ideas might mesh—acceptance by the former of a farm referendum on Federal control and by the latter of penalties for violation of agreements.

Grange Hits Traders.

Harrisburg, Pa., Nov. 16 (AP).—Delegates to the National Grange annual convention adopted a resolution today expressing opposition to operations of the Chicago Board of Trade, asserting "selling grain futures contracts has resulted in gambling in the prices of farm products, and injured producers and consumers."

Another resolution adopted today said the Grange favors a law, or a constitutional amendment, that will make all Federal and State officers and employes pay income tax. And a constitutional amendment making it illegal to issue tax-exempt securities, while making incomes on present tax-exempt securities taxable.

Immediate payment of the three cents per pound Government cotton subsidy instead of compelling planters to wait until after they had signed up for the 1938 cotton program, provisions of which are as yet unknown, was urged.

Mines Bureau Director Asks 2 Helium Wells

By the Associated Press.

Helium supplies should be increased to meet medical and aviation needs, a report to Secretary Ickes said yesterday.

Dr. John W. Finch, Bureau of Mines director, made the report, suggesting that two additional helium wells be drilled in the Government's natural gas field, Cliffside, Tex.

Senator Tom Connally Introduces Third-Degree Filibuster on Anti-Lynching Bill.

SOMETHING NEW in Senate filibusters, a "filibuster in the third degree," was achieved yesterday by droll Senator Tom Connally (Democrat), of Texas, vehement opponent of anti-lynching legislation.

Catching friends of the bill napping Senator Connally obtained unanimous consent for the clerk to read a speech against the bill by Justice Hugo L. Black, while Black was a Senator.

For two hours the clerk consumed time of the Senate by reading Black's 1935 speech. That carried the filibuster into the "second degree," Capitol wiseacres said.

The climax was reached in the reading of the Black speech. The Alabaman two years ago had sent a document to the desk to be read while he was making his anti-lynching address. When the clerk yesterday reached this point, he read the document submitted by Black in the Alabaman's speech submitted by Connally. That carried the filibuster into the "third degree."

Previously, another flair had been added to the Senate's famous filibuster technique, when Senator James F. Byrnes, South Carolina Democrat, prevented anti-lynching proponents from getting a vote on their motion by holding the floor through the Senate's "morning hour." Connally's filibuster followed.

Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, called Byrnes' speech "a filibuster to permit a filibuster."

APPOINTMENT OF SENATOR William G. McAdoo, of California, as a member of the Senate Democratic Steering Committee was announced by Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky.

"This committee," said a Democratic announcement, "is the all-important of the Democratic organizations in that it has charge of the legislative procedure, the appointment of committees and all essential functions of the Democratic majority. As it is a small committee, this is a distinct recognition of Senator McAdoo by the Administration."

EARLY CONSIDERATION of his bill proposing Federal charters for corporations operating in interstate commerce is hoped by Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, of Wyoming, who said he will press the bill. The Wyoming Senator said he "noted with much satisfaction that portion of President Roosevelt's message to Congress which said that "a way should be found for more effective methods of checking the growing concentration of economic control."

FINIS J. GARRETT, former Democratic House member from Tennessee, was nominated by the President to be presiding judge of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals here, in the only important new nomination sent to the Senate from the White House. Judge Garrett, now a member of the court, will succeed the late William J. Graham, of Illinois.

Only one other new nomination was made, that of R. J. Dill, to be Works Progress administrator for Florida. Included among several recess appointments submitted for confirmation was that of William Dawson, of Minnesota, Minister to Uruguay, and that of Murray Latimer, member of the Railroad Retirement Board.

QUICK SPENDING is the object Representative U. S. Guyer (Republican), of Kansas, has embodied in a bill which would levy not more than 10 per cent on money "in possession." Guyer contends such a bill would encourage owners of money to spend it, provide work and yield revenue for Federal work relief projects.

SENATOR SHEPPARD (Democrat), of Texas, proposed that Congress reinstate and promote George J. Shulz, dismissed September 17 as acting director of the legislative reference service of the Library of Congress.

Sheppard's resolution declared that the dismissal of Shulz was "unwise, unjustified and calculated seriously to impair the efficiency of the service." The resolution would require the librarian of Congress to reinstate Shulz and make him director of the reference service.

Shulz served two years as acting director, climaxing approximately 20 years as a member of the service's staff.

Chicago Firm Makes Capitalists Of Its Men by Profit Sharing Plan

Workers Pay 5 Pct. of Wages Into Fund, Company Contributes Up to Four Times as Much; Proceeds Available at Age of 60.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Nov. 16.—M. L. Joslyn, head of the Joslyn Manufacturing & Supply Co., explained today a profit sharing plan which he said made capitalists of his workers.

The employe invests 5 per cent of his earnings, with the company paying up to four times that amount into a fund controlled by a trustee, which becomes available to the worker at the age of 60. If he leaves the company earlier, he receives three-fifths of the total. An employe must join the plan after three years' service or leave the company. He can be discharged only by four-fifths vote of an advisory committee.

The plan has been in operation 19 years. The fund has earned an average of 9 per cent interest, compounded. An employe who has paid $100 a year for 18 years now has a credit of $16,500. The maximum participation is $200 a year.

Joslyn said the plan ended all labor turnover problems, strikes, labor disputes and broke the back of antagonism between capital and labor.

"It has given us men unafraid of dependency or old age," he added, "men with a steadily growing stake in the country and its institutions—defenders of capital because they have capital to defend."

Tax Decision Aids Brawner Estate

By the Associated Press.

The Board of Tax Appeals yesterday ordered the Bureau of Internal Revenue to recompute a deficiency of $11,510 in 1932 income taxes assessed against Roger J. Whiteford and Edgar N. Brawner, both of this city.

The bureau had assessed them as executors of the estate of Henry W. Brawner, jr., late owner of the Chestnut Farms Dairy.

Sustaining the bureau, the board determined the executors could not deduct $400 paid by Brawner for an audit of receipts and expenditures of Woodley Park Towers, an apartment which he contemplated purchasing. It upheld the bureau's determination property Brawner owned at 1415 K street northwest, was worth $69,448 instead of $125,000.

The board overruled disallowance of $4,258 Brawner paid as attorney's fees in connection with his dairy business. It overruled likewise disallowance of $21,530 Brawner deducted as losses on loans to McKeever & Goss, a real estate firm. It reduced this reduction, however, to $16,364.

By the Associated Press.

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 16.—Three convicts armed with two guns and ready to "shoot it out," left a faint trail tonight for Federal and State pursuers after an early morning jail break.

The trio—Percy Geary, 34; John Oley, 36, and Harold Crowley, 35—trussed up six guards, menaced them with smuggled guns and fled from the Onandaga County Penitentiary at nearby Jamesville, where they were held pending appeal from Federal phison sentences for the 1933 O'Connell kidnaping.

The three men, convicted with five others of abducting John J. O'Connell, jr., scion of a politically prominent Albany (N. Y.) family, drove in a commandeered car to Syracuse after their escape and disappeared.

State's "Greatest Manhunt."

Their escape came less than a week after arrest in Los Angeles of James Sweeney, last of 13 men indicted for the kidnaping. Two suspects committed suicide in jail while awaiting trial, and two pleaded guilty of lesser charges after testifying for the Government.

More than 350 State police and scores of Federal agents and Syracuse police, armed with machine guns, patrolled all highways leading from Syracuse in what Capt. George P. Dutton, deputy superintendent of State police, described as "New York's greatest manhunt."

Guard Kidnaped.

The escape, including such stock props as sawed bars and smuggled guns, was led by Geary "with apparent outside help," H. H. Paddock, jail superintendent, said.

Paddock said Geary sawed the bars from his cell door, held up the guards, and forced them to release Oley and Crowley. Then, he added, the three kidnaped Edward Hayes, another guard, and forced him to drive them 5 miles to Syracuse. There Hayes was released and spread the alarm.

In Washington, J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Department of Justice, announced appointment of a special squad of Federal agents to direct the search.

U. S. Offers $2,000 Apiece.

Attorney General Cummings said $2,000 would be paid by the department for the capture of each.

Young O'Connell was kidnaped from in front of his home the morning of July 9, 1933, taken to Hoboken, N. J., and held for 22 days. He was released upon payment of $40,000 ransom.

Last March, Francis Leo Oley, brother of John, was arrested in Denver and within a few days John Oley, Geary and Crowley also were taken into custody.

Paddock disclosed that a few days ago he wrote Federal Judge Frederick H. Bryant, of Malone, and urged that the convicted kidnapers be transferred to another jail because of "overcrowded conditions." The superintendent said he had been worried "about the Onondaga Jail.

Judge Intervenes In Trooper's Favor

Somerset, Pa., Nov. 16 (AP).—State Supreme Court Justice George W. Moxey today interrupted Attorney General Charles J. Margiotti's argument against a new trial for Stacy Gunderman, former State trooper, convicted of the Frank C. Monaghan murder.

The justice, commenting on Margiotti's contention that Monaghan died as a result of "cruel and barbarous" beating by officers, said:

10 WPA Officials Indicted for Graft

Chicago, Nov. 16 (AP).—Ten Works Progress Administration officials and a former building inspector were under indictment today on charges of bribery and extortion.

The indictments were based on allegations that the men accepted sums ranging from $25 to $200 on promises to place workers in higher wage groups.

The paying workers, of whom 17 were named, allegedly placed their donations in envelopes each pay day and turned them over.

Oilmen Defend 'Price Fixing' as Help to Rivals

By the Associated Press.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 16.—Counsel for one of the 19 corporate defendants in the Federal Government's gasoline price fixing conspiracy case declared today this was the first time he had ever heard of large companies being tried under the Sherman anti-trust act for trying to preserve competition.

The Government alleged major companies bought small refineries' gasoline in 1935 and 1936 at high prices in a scheme to raise Midwestern gasoline prices. The defense contended the majors bought surplus gasoline to keep it off the market.

T. P. Young, of St. Louis, counsel for the Shell Petroleum Corporation, said in argument before Judge Patrick T. Stone that the prosecutors, in an attempt to keep from the record reference to the NRA petroleum code, had subpenaed members of the code authority's planning and co-ordination committee.

Mine Bombings Laid to War of Illinois Unions

By the Associated Press.

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 16.—Both of rival miners' unions were blamed for bombings and other violence in the Illinois coal fields when opposing attorneys made opening statements today in the trial of 41 men on Federal conspiracy charges.

Welly K. Hopkins, special prosecutor from Washington, asserted funds of the Progressive Miners of America were used to buy dynamite.

The defense replied with charges that John L. Lewis and the United Mine Workers of America were responsible for the mine union warfare.

The Government sought to prove bombing of coal trains and mines between 1932 and 1935 was plotted deliberately.

Most of the defendants are affiliated with the Progressive union, organized in 1932 by revolting members of the U. M. W. A., dominated by Lewis as international president.

Denouncing Lewis, Chief Defense Counsel Arthur M. Fitzgerald contended the United Mine Workers resorted to violence in an effort to break up the Progressive union.

The bombings, Hopkins said, were intended to intimidate mine and railroad officials in a campaign of terrorism against firms handling coal dug by the U. M. W. A.

Air Crash Kills Five in Royal Hessian House

By the Associated Press.

Ostend, Belgium, Nov. 16.—A flaming Belgian airliner crashed in the "white death" of a Belgian fog today, all but wiping out the ancient grand ducal line of Hesse Bei Rhein.

All 11 occupants of the London-bound plane were killed—including five members of the former German royal family which has close blood ties with every reigning house in Europe.

The victims:

Lina Hahn, maid.

On Way to Wedding.

The news overwhelmed Prince Ludwig von Hesse Bei Rhein, who was waiting at Croydon Airfield in London to welcome his mother, brother and members of his brother's family as his wedding guests.

The swift succession of deaths in the sixteenth century family created three Grand Dukes Hesse Bei Rhein in a month. George, who was killed today, just had succeeded to the title on the death of his father, Ludwig, 29, now becomes the grand duke.

The English girl he was to wed quietly, possibly tomorrow, will become the grand duchess. She is Miss Margaret Campbell Geddes, daughter of Sir Auckland Geddes, former British Ambassador to the United States. The wedding already had been postponed once because of the death of Ludwig's father a week ago.

Ludwig was treated at Croydon and taken to the home of Lord Louis and Lady Mountbatten, relatives of King George.

To Ostend in Fog.

The grand duke's wedding party had boarded the plane at Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany. The liner did not make a scheduled stop at Brussels because of the fog, continuing 50 miles to Ostend, on the North Sea.

Eyewitnesses said the plane struck a chimney in attempting to land at Steene Airport on the outskirts of Ostend. One wing was torn off and the crippled ship crashed 300 yards away with a violent explosion, followed by flames. Visibility was only 250 yards and there was a ceiling of only 160 feet.

Wedding to Go On.

London, Nov. 16 (AP).—Sir Auckland Geddes tonight announced his daughter Margaret's marriage to Prince Ludwig von Hesse Bei Rhein would take place tomorrow despite the Belgian air crash which killed five members of the prince's family.

Rock, Hammer Used To Kill Two Rabbits

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 16.—George Baker was disappointed when he found that the Soil Conservation Service, which employs him, doesn't permit time off for hunting. So he started out with his gang of men yesterday with a heavy heart.

But tonight two rabbits graced Baker's table, both of which fell before his unerring aim. While unloading his truck he saw a rabbit sitting and threw a hammer, breaking one of its legs. He chased it across two fields before capturing it. A few moments later he brought down the second rabbit with a rock.

Organizers Ousted By 50 at Crisfield, Unionist Declares

Three organizers of the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers of America, affiliated with the C. I. O., were driven from Crisfield, Md., Monday by a crowd of about 50 persons, Leif Dehl, president of District No. 7 of the union, said here last night. He said the organizers, headed by Michael Howard, had been at Crisfield four days organizing oyster workers.

They went to Salisbury, Md., he said, but expected to return to Crisfield this morning and resume their organizing efforts.

Chief of Police Willard Laird of Crisfield said Monday he had not advised the men to leave town and had had no conversation with them.

Mayor William H. Bradshaw of Crisfield said he had advised the organizers to "withdraw peacefully" from the town, since he felt this was not the proper time for their efforts. He said they replied they intended to remain. He understood they had left, he said, but had heard of no disorder.

Dahl said he telephoned Gov. Nice of Maryland to ask protection for the three men.

In conjunction with the exhibition of rural arts, which is a part of the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Department of Agriculture, a concert of American music will be presented at 8 o'clock tonight in the department auditorium. Participaing organizations are the department orchestra, directed by Walter Bauer; the department chorus, directed by Robert Frederick Freund; and a vocal group from th Farm Scurity Administration. Admission to this concert will be by tickets which may be obtained without charge at the rural art exhibit in the main building of the department or at the Land Grant College Associaion desk in the Willard Hotel lobby.

D. C. Minor Court Bill Gets Priority in House

The small claims court bill which passed the Senate last session will be given priority before the House District Committee when it meets next Wednesday, Chairman Palmisano said yesterday.

Palmisano said he favors the bill in principle, but believes that the jurisdiction of the court should be raised to claims of up to $100. As amended by the Senate, the limitation is to suits of $50 or less.

Hopkins Tells Mayors Relief Is U. S. Burden

Predicts Permanent Need for Government Aid in Care of Poor.

A continuing need for Government aid in work relief with "abolition of poverty" as its aim was predicted by Harry L. Hopkins, WPA administrator, yesterday before the United States Conference of Mayors at the Mayflower Hotel.

He joined with Mayors Edward J. Kelley, of Chicago; Frank L. Shaw, of Los Angeles, and Harold L. Burton, of Cleveland, in asserting the responsibility of the Federal Government for care of the unemployed. The conference, however, took no action on the question beyond referring to its resolutions committee a resolution asking a 30 per cent increase in WPA quotas to cities.

Study of the unemployment situation followed a discussion of industrial disputes, with the roles of Federal, State and city governments in dealing with them.

Necessary readjustment to new techniques of bargaining under the Wagner act, the labor battle between C. I. O. and A. F. of L. unions and competition between cities to obtai. new industries, were advanced as the major stumbling blocks to orderly settlement of labor rontroversies.

J. Warren Madden, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, told the conference "there is no reason whatever for Americans to be pessimistic about the practicability of industrial democracy."

The greatest present difficulty in reaching the "new freedom" under the Wagner law, Madden said, could be traced to lack of training among employers and labor leaders in the technique of collective bargaining.

Madden charged that officials in some cities had deliberately frustrated the operation of the labor relations act. "Mayhem, murderous assault, and kidnaping have been committed with impunity in some cities against American citizens whose only offense has been that they are union organizers," he said.

"I have seen a man who is as gentle and deserving of the protection of the law as you and I are whose head was hammered to a bloody pulp with an iron hammer on the main street of a great American city by a gang of criminals in plain view of many witnesses. He was a union organizer. No arrests were made.

"The Federal Government has now undertaken a definite role in the labor relations of your communities. It has guaranteed working people in important enterprises the right to have unions if they want them. Among the results should be a more intelligent and self-respecting citizenry, a greater equality of bargaining power, and the substitution of the procedure of the conference table for the strike and the lockout."

Hopkins outlined the range of Government efforts to advance economic and social security among the lower income groups.

Railroads Want I. C. C. Ordered To Raise Rates

revenue. Only Congress could bring about that result, it is asserted, unless the I. C. C. acts on its own initiative.

Fletcher, expounding the official views of the railroads, which he frankly asserted "face a critical situation," also urged an end to "serious efforts to enact ma'--work laws, the only effect of which is to increase the expense, in violation of the laws of trade and commerce." He specifically was hitting at the proposal to limit freight trains to 70 cars, approved by the Senate and pending in the House.

More Revenue Needed.

The Administration regards a stimulation of railroad purchasing power as one of three ways to offset the industrial recession which is now taking place. The other two comprise an opening of purse-strings for new construction by the electrical utilities and a revival of residential construction on a large scale by private enterprise

Of the three problems the railroads are said to be the thorniest. Persons within the Administration who have been studying their situation contend that the railroads must undertake some economies to eliminate wasteful operations but they also must have more revenue, either as a result of increased traffic or increased rates. Since the volume of traffic is decreasing, rather than increasing, it would appear that the only prospect for a boost in revenue is through rate increases.

The railroads have petitioned the I. C. C. for a general basic freight-rate increase of 15 per cent. Hearings on this petition will commence on November 29 and therein rests the hope to get the railroads back into the business of buying equipment and continuing construction programs laid aside earlier this year. By such action, the Administration looks for assistance to the durable goods industries, such as steel, and a pickup in employment.

The petition of the railroads, however, is meeting with opposition from shippers and consumer groups. The National Coal Association yesterday filed a brief with the I. C. C. opposing the requested freight increase insofar as it applies to bituminous coal and coke The American Trucking Associations at their first annual convention in Louisville, Ky., named a committee to represent their industry at the hearings.

Fletcher, in his ddress yesterday, dissented from one proposition put forward in Administration quarters regarding the railroads, namely the contention that the carriers must undertake greater economies to eliminate wasteful operations. He asserted that "in the matter of reducing expenses through improved operating methods the railroads have gone about as far as they can."

The general counsel for the railroad association contended that assurances of fair treatment for the railroads in the matter of rates and that the initiative of management will not be artificially interfered with by legislative mandate, "would tend to restore confidence in the railroads as a medium for investment and the necessary inflow of capital from private sources would thus be assured."

Fletcher contended the increase in freight rates authorized by the I. C. C. on October 19, which would add an estimated $47,500,000 annually to railroad revenues, was "hardly more than a drop in the bucket" when compared with increased expenses of the carriers.

Operating Expenses Up.

Operating expenses due to new taxes, higher wages and increases in material costs are now $665,000,000 greater than in 1933, he asserted. He pointed out that if the pending petition for a 15 per cent increase—which would average out at about a 13 per cent increase in the rate structure—were granted and added to the increase granted last month, "the average level of rates will not be higher than that which prevailed in 1930."

As a factor in the recovery picture, the railroads, he pointed out, buy 23 per cent of all the bituminous coal mined in the country, 19 per cent of all the fuel oil produced, 17 per cent of all iron and steel production and 20 per cent of the entire cut of timber.

"In 1929," he added, "the railroads spent for fuel and other materials and supplies $1,329,000,000. In 1933, which was the slough of the depression, this figure had declined to a little more than $465,000,000. It is easy to understand what was the effect upon business generally for the railroads to reduce their purchases by something like $865,000,00. It is true that in 1936 the figure had risen to $803,000,000, but even then the railroads bought fuel and other supplies in an amount which was $500,000,000 less than they spent in 1929."

Fletcher contended the undistributed profits tax had proved to be "one of the worst handicaps with which the industry is confronted." He pointed out that the railroads have been repeatedly subjected to I. C. C. and other governmental criticism for their failure to set aside earnings for debt reduction. In that law, he asserted, Congress imposed a penalty on railroads for seeking to meet these criticisms.

Meanwhile, attention again will be focused on efforts to revive activity in housing construction. The Chamber of Commerce of the United States today will open a two-day conference of representatives of the building industry to discuss aspects of that problem, with the emphasis on means of encouraging private capital to invest in housing projects for rental purposes.

til the sum reached $50,000 was proposed.

Senator Robert J. Bulkley (Democrat), Ohio, proposed exemptions from the undivided profits tax of net income up to $50,000; a two-year carrying forward of losses for tax deduction purposes, and exemptions for plant improvements up to one-half the cost.

Senator F. Ryan Duffy (Democrat), Wisconsin, revived his proposal for an undivided profits tax credit of 30 per cent for concerns which use their earnings for plant expansion.

Senator Frederick Van Nuys, (Democrat), Indiana, was drafting amendments to provide similar exemptions for plant expansion, and to render tax free preferred and other types of dividends. He seeks complete exemption of earnings up to "$10,000 or $15,000."

Senator Lewis B. Schwellenbach (Democrat), Washington, proposed tax exemptions for earnings devoted to debt payments, plant repairs and replacements and aid for companies emerging from bankruptcy.

In the House, Chairman Fred M. Vinson, of the House tax subcommittee, estimated a revenue loss to the Treasury of $63,900,000 would result from the subcommittee's decision to permit one-year carry-over of losses, to be applied against the net year's income.

Other Losses Feared.

The Vinson estimate brought to $92,900,000 the estimated aggregate cost of business tax modifications proposed by the group for January session action. An additional $140,000,000 would be added if the committee approves a proposal to repeal the capital stock and excess profits taxes. Vinson expressed doubt yesterday that the latter taxes would be fully repealed, asserting, "we need the $140,000,000."

Chairman Pat Harrison, of the Senate Finance Committee likewise opposed repeal of the capital stock and excess profits tax. Harrison said "we can't afford to take out such a large block of revenue."

Senator Harrison would not say whether or not there would be action this session to modify the undivided profits and capital gains taxes, but was inclined to believe there would not be. He said it "takes a good deal of time" to prepare a tax bill.

Harrison favored modification of both taxes, but said "we should legislate in the normal way."

Others Demand Action.

Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia—"Any law that levies an additional tax of 27 per cent on a corporation, when current revenue is used for expansion and to provide employment, is not only a barrier to prosperity, but is ridiculous on its face. I will support repeal or modification of it immediately—I don't care how it is done."

Senator Bulkley—"I think we ought to do it right now. It is urgent and it ought to be attended to."

Senator Duffy—"I would like to see it done this session; I am not concerned with procedure."

Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas—"I would like to see the law modified this session. We ought to go back to the old corporation tax, with a much modified undivided profits tax added."

Senator Smith (Democrat), of South Carolina—"I believe it should be done this session, so business will know where it stands."

Senator Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina—"I would like to see it done at the earliest possible moment, ahead of the anti-lynching bill, the Government reorganization bill, and a lot of other measures, but my better judgment tells me it can't be done. It is more important than anything here except farm legislation. I put the farm measure first."

Republicans Unanimous.

Senator Radcliffe (Democrat), Maryland—"It ought to be done as quickly as possible—as quickly as it can be fitted into the program. It is highly important."

Senator Lonergan (Democrat), Connecticut—"If I had the power, I would repeal the whole thing."

Senator Nye (Republican), North Dakota—"After the farm bill, I think modification of the undivided profits tax is the No. 1 challenge."

Senator Van Nuys—"I favor modification this session, as a rider to any revenue bill in the Senate, if the House fails to act."

Senators who previously went on record in favor of immediate modification were King, Utah; Bailey, North Carolina; Burke, Nebraska; Copeland, New York; Clark, Missouri; George, Georgia; O'Mahoney, Wyoming; Pittman, Nevada (all Democrats). Republican Senators virtually were unanimous in favor of immediate revision.

Eight Democratic members of the Senate Finance Committee have urged immediate downward revision or repeal—Bailey, Byrd, Bulkley, Clark, Connally, George, King and Lonergan.

Anti-Lynching Bill Filibustered In Senate; House Does No Work

D. Smith (Democrat), South Carolina, said the committee would work day and night to bring out a bill, but reiterated opposition to compulsory control features. The House Agriculture Committee was encountering similar difficulties in reaching an agreement. Behind the scenes battles raged on both sides of the Capitol over so-called compulsory features and methods of financing the program.

How long the Senate's Southern filibuster against the anti-lynching bill would continue, leaders had no way of gauging, but they hoped for a "break," and predicted the Senate would yield at any time for the farm bill. Connally will still hold the floor when the Senate reconvenes today, but he denied he is conducting a filibuster, and said he would have little to add. Fourteen pages of Senator Black's 1935 speech remained to be read by the clerk.

"What are we here for?" asked Connally. "Why has the President of the United States under his Constitutional power called Senators and Representatives from their homes where they were investigating conditions and ascertaining the views of the people with regard to national problems? Read the record. It fails to disclose anywhere that the President mentioned or had in mind this particular piece of proposed legislation (anti-lynching)."

Connally challenged Wagner to reply, and said he heard "no answer."

"Those of us accustomed to running to the telephone booth while some Senator is talking on the floor and telephoning the White House should run out there now and get a message of that kind and come come back and tell us about it," said Connally.

The Black speech, read by the clerk, bitterly condemned provisions of the anti-lynching bill, particularly a section giving district courts authority to try and punish all persons participating in a lynching.

Black in the speech referred to "the Federal court, this great haven of refuge, the Federal court; this great repository of knowledge and wisdom and justice, the Federal court; this great safeguard presided over by men appointed for life by an individual who is so much better qualified to preserve the rights of the people than is a court presided over by a man elected by the people themselves."

Connally said "thank God" the "old" Supreme Court is still there, with the single addition of Justice Black, who the Texan said he believed could be counted on to vote against the constitutionality of the anti-lynching bill.

As the filibuster continued, Senators generally expressed pessimism over the prospects for enactment of any substantial part of the President's program this session.

"If the Senate gets up the reorganization and the anti-lynching bills, I don't think there is good prospect of doing anything except adjourning," commented Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), Virginia.

No Token Worries, 4-Year-Old Rides Free for 5 Hours

Raise in street car fares here had little effect on 4-year-old Jacques Futrell, jr., 2237 Garfield street northwest, who rode several hours free yesterday.

Despite the fact his mother was frantic over his disappearance and police were searching the streets for him, Jacques, son of an Evening Star employe, was missing nearly five hours.

Making no disturbance, Jacques was unmolested the first trip out Wisconsin avenue, though the motorman thought it unusual. The second trip found the motorman perturbed because Jacques was still there.

On the third round trip, Jacques was taken to the Traveler's Aid Station at Union Station. Unable to give any information about himself, the child was sent to the Receiving Home where he was claimed by his parents.

Fishbein Holds Venereal Ills May Be Beaten

By the United Press.

Youngstown, Ohio, Nov. 16.—The time has come to "prove to the world" that under the American system of living venereal diseases may be stamped out in the same way as typhoid and diphtheria, Dr. Morris Fishbein said tonight in an address prepared for delivery over the National Broadcasting System.

"Considerable numbers of American cities and villages, towns and hamlets, have reported an entire year without a single death from diphtheria or from typhoid fever," Fishbein, editor of the Journal of American Medical Association, said.

"We now possess the knowledge necessary to secure results that will permit a similar claim in relationship to the venereal diseases."

Fishbein's address was delivered over the blue network of the same chain which last week refused to allow Commentator Gen. Hugh S. Johnson on the air with a broadcast to discuss social diseases.

Feared "Bluntness."

Broadcasting company officials said they feared Johnson's language would be a "little blunt." They said Fishbein's address was the "frankest" discussion of social diseases ever on the air.

"Again and again the people have been told about the havoc that is wrought by the venereal diseases," Fishbein said. "All of us ought to know that there is not just one; there are several diseases affecting the organs and tissues of men and women concerned in childbirth or intimate personal relations. Most of these diseases are spread by human contact.

"Occasionally, these infections are acquired innocently.

"There is the innocent infection of the eyes of the child at birth, against which most intelligent governments have taken action by the demand that physicians and midwives, at the time of childbirth, use a simple antiseptic substance.

Occasionally the lip is infected by promiscuous kissing, there are rare instances of infection transmitted innocently, as was the case when the policeman was bitten on the thumb by a woman who was resisting arrest.

"The vast majority of cases of infection with the venereal diseases represent intimate contact." Occasionally infections acquired outside the marriage tie are transmitted in the ordinary course of life by the father to the mother, or by the mother to the father, or by the mother to the child, by those entrusted with the protection of these loved ones to the very people whom they would most desire to protect."

Tells of Experiments.

Fishbein told of experimental work which has been done in venereal diseases; of the discovery of organisms causing syphilis and gonorrhea; of the Wasserman test and of the introduction of salvarsan or "606" in treatment.

"The use of these discoveries and the campaign against these diseases have languished primarily because many people do not know the nature of the diseases," he said. "People do not realize they are curable.

"Today scientific medicine, combining its efforts with those of public health officials, is beginning an organized, sustained campaign against venereal diseases, a campaign in which the public is participating on a tremendous scale."

Fishbein gave Surgeon General Thomas Parran, of the U. S. Public Health Service, credit for "bringing the control of these diseases more prominently to the public mind."

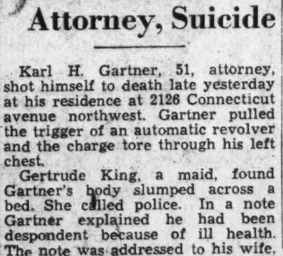
Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

The Logical Play.

Lest anyone think I am a natural enemy of finesses, I hasten to record a hand in which a first-round finesse was by far the best play. Apparently, finesses are a sort of vice—they're sure to "get" you unless you can either "take 'em or leave 'em alone!"

North, dealer.
North-South vulnerable.



The bidding:

North	East	South	West
4 N T	Pass	5 ♠	Pass
6 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

North, with a seven-card diamond suit which he had not rebid, should have bid six diamonds (seven would have been a laydown), rather than six spades, which was not nearly so good a contract.

West, rightly figuring that heart tricks for his side were remote, opened the club King. East signaling with the Jack. Declarer studied the hand and saw that he was by no means safe. To lead the King and another spade would be dangerous. If he finessed against the Queen, West might win and gobble up club tricks. If he went up with the Ace and failed to drop the Queen, the opponents would interrupt the running of diamonds and, as before, cash clubs. The heart Ace, of course, was good for only one discard.

Another method of playing the hand (and the one I fear most players would use) was to discard a club on the heart Ace, ruff a heart, ruff a club with dummy's six, ruff the last heart, and then ruff South's last club with the spade King. But this would be fatal. The play would then be in dummy, with no means of exit.

After due consideration, declarer hit on the correct line of play. On winning with the club Ace, he led dummy's six of spades and played the ten from his own hand. The logic of this play must be apparent. As it happened, West won with the Queen, but he could make no return that would embarrass declarer. A club continuation could be ruffed in dummy, the closed hand entered with a heart ruff, and the outstanding spades drawn, then the diamond suit run off for more than enough discards.

Had East held the guarded spade Queen, declarer's ten would have held. A spade return to the King, a heart ruff, and the laying down of the spade Ace would have cleaned up the situation, as before. Declarer's play was proof against any 3-2 spade division. If the spades had lain four to the Queen in one hand and one in the other, the contract would have been virtually impossible.

Karl Gartner, 51, Attorney, Suicide

Karl H. Gartner, 51, attorney, shot himself to death late yesterday at his residence at 2126 Connecticut avenue northwest. Gartner pulled the trigger of an automatic revolver and the charge tore through his left chest.

Gertrude King, a maid, found Gartner's body slumped across a bed. She called police. In a note Gartner explained he had been despondent because of ill health. The note was addressed to his wife, Mrs. Kitty Beall Gartner. He was a native of Knoxville, Tenn.

After the body was found, Allen Gartner, brother and law partner, issued the following statement:

2,500 Abandon 12-Hour Strike In G. M. Plant

Dispute Over 450 Lay-offs to Be Left to Negotiations.

By the Associated Press.

Pontiac, Mich., Nov. 16.—A sit-down strike of 2,500 workers in the Fisher Body plant here was abandoned after 12 hours today and the management agreed to reopen the factory after receiving promises that there would be no more strikes while negotiations are one.

E. R. Leeder, plant manager, said that after a reduced operating schedule necessitated the lay-off of 450 men November 1, the union demanded their reinstatement. To accede, Leeder said, would have meant placing all 7,000 workers on a 16-hour work week. Negotiations on the dispute will start at 10 a. m. tomorrow.

Today's strike was the first major sit-down in General Motors plants since the widespread action last winter, and first of any type since the C. I. O. union rejected new contract amendments advanced by the corporation last week-end.

New Rule Limited By School Board

The personnel committee of the Board of Education Monday agreed to hold in abeyance a plan approved in June which provided that District night school teachers possess the same qualifications as day school teachers.

Headed by Chairman R. A. Maurer, eight of the nine members of the committee attended the meeting and set September 1, 1940, as the deadline for night school teachers to obtain their degrees.

Acting on a petition signed by 19 teachers, the committee limited application of the extension to night school teachers who have maintained a record of "very good" or better, for the past two years and who maintain that rating during the two-year extension.

Following the regular meeting of the committee, an executive board meeting was held to consider status of teachers who resigned their positions as the result of the now repealed section 213, which prohibited employment of married couples in the government.

Congress' Responsibility.

Legislative wheels have begun to grind on Capitol Hill with no urgent measure ready for action in either house. The Senate has reverted to its long-standing controversy over the anti-lynching bill. Being otherwise unoccupied, the House got into a snarl over the simple question of adjournment. Such a beginning for a five-week extra session can scarcely be considered auspicious.

It is already evident that the attitude of the present Congress is likely to be far more important than any specific measures it may pass. Legislators are no longer disposed to accept White House bills as a matter of course. For the most part they have returned to Washington with a determination to assert their own views. The delay in preparing Administration bills has given them an excellent opportunity to follow their own course of action.

There is much ground for satisfaction over this trend, especially in view of the fact that it follows immediately after a renewal of contacts between members of Congress and their constituents. Pursuit of a more independent policy during the last few years might have prevented some of the difficulties with which the country is now confronted. It is well to remember, however, that Congress will not necessarily become a wise and deliberative body merely by throwing away its rubber stamp.

As psychologists so frequently point out, repression always tends to encourage an explosion. The applicability of that principle to politics was demonstrated last summer in the flare-up of opposition to White House measures which followed defeat of the Supreme Court bill. Now the business recession has given Congressmen a new opportunity for revolt, and many of them will be inclined to make the most of it.

So far as this attitude means a more critical examination of the Administration's program it is entirely constructive. But the obligation of Congress cannot be fulfilled by reckless sniping or indiscriminate obstruction. As that body asserts more independence it also acquires a greater responsibility for leadership within its own ranks. In other words, the alternative to executive domination of Congress is an orderly, well disciplined legislative body functioning largely on its own initiative.

Minority Leader Snell may applaud whenever an insurgent group of legislators kicks over the traces. But the great majority of citizens who place genuine recovery above partisan advantage will not share that view. Their appeal is for a transfer of legislative responsibility from the Executive Mansion to the halls of Congress, where it belongs, and not for a growth of irresponsibility among representatives in whom the people have placed their trust.

Secretary Ickes' Letter.

In our letter columns today we publish a communication from Secretary Ickes in which he takes exception to an editorial in The Post of October 25 under the caption "Our Two Police Forces." Nothing in that editorial was intended as a reflection upon the efficiency of the United States Park Police, so far as their activities extend. Its purpose was simply to point out the desirability of consolidating the two major police forces now operating in the District.

Mr. Ickes' conclusion that we favor a reduction in the number of policemen assigned to the parks is at variance with the language of the editorial. It clearly stated that, even with the two forces unified, "the staff would still be in need of additional men." Since Mr. Ickes takes a similar view, it is to be hoped that he will use his influence to bring about this urgent expansion of the District's police force.

Nor can there be any disagreement over the Secretary's statement that the well-trained force now operating under his general direction is "in a better position to give efficient policing in the parks than would be a new force or a partially new force." To oust these officers and appoint a group of novices would be inexcusable. What is needed, as our previous editorial pointed out, is a consolidation of the existing forces and not replacement of capable policemen now in the service.

It is to the credit of the Interior Department that it has provided special training for its park policemen. A unified police force would certainly have to continue that commendable practice. But that is beside the point. The desirability of training policemen for their work by no means justifies the maintenance of two separate forces, with extra overhead costs and unavoidable confusion as to their jurisdiction.

Because "it would be fundamentally unsound to confuse jurisdictions" Mr. Ickes says he would hesitate before calling on the Metropolitan police for regular service in the parks. Yet he admits that, "for reasons of economy, we call on the Metropolitan Police Department . . . for police radio, patrol wagon service, call boxes, precinct stations, etc." That statement goes a long way toward undermining his whole case against consolidation. Under a unified system these facilities would be automatically available to policemen serving the parks and there could be no confusion of police jurisdiction.

On the whole, Secretary Ickes' letter seems to strengthen an already strong case against maintenance of a separate force to police nearly 700 different areas scattered throughout the city.

If local government in the District were to be regarded merely as a hodge-podge of Federal bureaus operating within their specific spheres, little could be gained by bringing the present dual police force under one head. But if a real community government is to be developed, as most citizens hope, it would be obviously unreasonable to leave the city's available police divided between the Board of Commissioners and the Interior Department. It is the failure of Secretary Ickes to identify himself with the forward movement to give Washington a real municipal government that is most disappointing.

To Make Condemnation Count.

In approving a resolution condemnatory of Japan, the Brussels conference, with only Italy voting in the negative, cleared the path for further action.

Japan was given every opportunity to state her case at Brussels. She refused to participate in the conference. She was repeatedly urged to accept the impartial mediation of the other Nine-Power Treaty signatories with the sole purpose of restoring peace in the Far East on a basis compatible with the terms of that solemn pact. These offers were spurned. Thereby, Japan again stands condemned as a nation faithless to its treaty pledges and "out of step with the rest of the world."

Only one nation—Italy—took Japan's side at Brussels. The aggressors must obviously stick together. But that circumstance only emphasizes the importance of a similar unity among the democracies whose will to peace is utterly vitiated by their inability to co-operate.

The democratic powers, including the United States, cannot stop with resolutions of censure alone. Indeed, having condemned Japan, they have no decent alternative except to curtail the assistance now being given Japan in her aggression. By the same token they are morally bound to consider material assistance to China, now fighting a desperate rear-guard action, as shown by the removal of the government from Nanking to Hankow.

All nations represented at Brussels share that solemn responsibility. But the obligations are not equal. Those countries that have the greater stake in the Far East, in particular those nations without whose indirect aid Japan cannot continue her treaty-smashing course, have the major responsibility in carrying out the implications of Monday's resolution.

In the light of this fact there is transcendent importance in the readiness manifested by Great Britain and France to go as far and as fast as will the United States in helping restrain Japan.

Our isolationists, blinded by suspicions, see in this suggestion only a trap to embroil the United States in unpredictable difficulties. Actually the attitude of Great Britain and France, faced as they are by the extremely dangerous Spanish situation at their very doorsteps, is an encouraging sign of readiness to co-operate with the United States at a time when such co-operation could be vital to the peace of the world.

If all three nations are prepared to work together the question of which one takes the first step is of minor moment. Nor is there any convincing reason why this Nation should not lead in practical protest if there is certainty that the others will follow.

We, too, have obligations that we cannot escape without doing incalculable damage to the cause of peace and to the doctrine of the sanctity of treaties by which we rightly set great store. While, on the one hand, we have kept the record straight by condemning Japan and by participating in the Brussels conference, we have, at the same time, provided the island empire with the sinews of war. A propagandist leaflet of Japanese origin points out that the United States is Japan's chief source of supply after Canada and Great Britain. It is the Anglo-Saxon democracies that are enabling Japan to carry on her war of conquest.

We cannot, if the Nine-Power Treaty means anything, continue to provide Japan with the wherewithal of aggression while China is left helpless. Without military or naval action of any kind we are in a position, in co-operation with the other peace-loving states, to cut off the aid now being given to the aggressor, merely by refusing to buy Japanese products. Such action, while China is blockaded, would be far more nearly neutral than our present course.

LaGuardia's Call For Relief.

In addressing the Conference of Mayors, New York's Mayor LaGuardia referred feelingly to the vicious circle created by "lack of purchasing power, reduced production, reduced employment, increased relief." He made no mention, however, of that other vicious circle started by excessive relief spending which swells budgetary deficits and in so doing impairs business confidence, reduces employment and gives rise to demands for more relief.

Ignoring the latter chain of cause and effect, the mayor expressed a belief that the Federal Government would have to appropriate more money for relief purposes if the present downward trend of business continues. It is very significant that there is no suggestion that the local governments can or should limit their demands in view of the state of Federal finances.

On the contrary, Mayor LaGuardia calmly assumes that if unemployment increases, the Federal Government should assume the new relief load. He also feels aggrieved because the Government has not fulfilled its promises to provide work for the employable unemployed. He complains because New York City is carrying part of this load which the Administration should be financing under the formula it is supposed to be following.

Undoubtedly if the Government had actually lived up to its formula, it would be spending much larger sums on relief than at the present. But considering the size of the current outlays, it should simply admit the impossibility of carrying out its original program and allocate the sums at its disposal as equitably as possible. Mayor LaGuardia is palpably irritated because New York City defrays a larger share of relief costs than many other municipalities. But New York has benefited greatly from the liberal expenditure of Federal funds on public projects. Furthermore, despite protests, New York is better able to pay than some of the municipalities that have made virtually no contribution to relief.

It seems almost impossible to devise any rigid formula for apportioning the relief burden between Federal and local authorities on a satisfactory basis. An inflexible policy, calling for a fixed percentage contribution, would simply mean that hard-pressed communities would receive inadequate aid. In some cases, perhaps, reforms of local tax systems might be insisted upon to provide supplementary sources of aid for the unemployed. But there are distinct limits to what can be accomplished along such lines by Federal relief authorities within a limited period and in the absence of sufficient knowledge of local financial problems.

The only feasible way in which to force State and municipal governments to assume a larger share of the relief burden is to cut Federal appropriations and let the local governments work out their problems with such assistance as the Federal Government can afford to give. If the Federal authorities should stand ready to step into the breach whenever the localities protest that the relief load is too heavy, we never could balance the budget. There would always be some plausible excuse for deferring the day for really substantial economies to begin.

Slick Slang.

If your girl calls you "pickle-puss," don't reach for your hat. If she suddenly says, "Take a letter," instead of "I love you," don't think it's all over. And if she prates about "powder," consult the nearest wine list. That is, if you wish to be classified as a super-super by the debutantes of 1937-38, whose slanguage has reached the point of needing interpretation. The current issue of Vogue attempts to render that service in an article entitled "Debutantes' Dictionary."

In the good old days, the language of the fan was the escorts' Esperanto. It's not so simple now what with each part of the country having its own ideas of what constitutes endearing young terms. The answer to a maiden's prayer in Boston might sound entirely different if described by a deb in Philadelphia. In other words, an eligible bachelor known as "yummy" to the Beacon street belles might be tagged "swish" by the fillies of Philly. And if a man is referred to as "fruit" or "meat-ball" in Chicago, it doesn't mean he looks good enough to eat. On the contrary, them's fighting words to the initiate for they signify a social washout.

"After a gentleman has been presented to a lady," according to an etiquette book published in 1882, "he may be in doubt whether the acquaintance will prove agreeable to her." A gentleman these days need not suffer such uncertainty if he will but acquaint himself with the new language of the debs. For if a girl says, "Stop being a goon, pickle-puss, and truck over to my diggins for a powder," he will know that she means, "Stop being bashful, darling, and come over to my house for a drink."

Entreaty to all writers of motion picture promotion copy: Please find the word "exotic" in the dictionary, note that it means simply "foreign," and then leave it in the dictionary for a long, long rest.

If the radio comedians wanted to be halfway fair about it, they'd start off their gags with "quote" and end them with "unquote."

Immigration Quotas.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One of the needful measures which Congress should give consideration to at an early date is a proposal to "modernize" the method by which our immigration quotas are determined.

Currently these quotas are based upon the number of "foreign-born persons resident in the United States at a specific date," namely, in 1920. Currently, also, naturalization of foreign-born persons by our courts is predicated upon certain compliances with the provisions of our immigration laws.

The proposed change would attempt further to bring the immigration law and the naturalization law into closer co-ordination.

This modernized method of determining immigration quotas would provide an amendment to the law so that hereafter these quotas would be based upon the "average number of foreign-born persons who have been admitted to citizenship by our courts pursuant to the provisions of our naturalization laws during a designated period of ten years."

As you will see, the proposal logically changes the base from "resident foreign-born persons" to "naturalized foreign-born persons." This proposed change would limit immigration by numerical restriction predicated upon a record of compliance with provisions of our naturalization laws.

Why should the unnaturalized foreign-born persons who are simply "resident" in the United States longer play any part in determining the numerical limitations upon new immigrations of foreign-born persons? JOHN JAMES JAY.

Sickening Alibis.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: L. M. Vaughan's letter, "Alibis Make Me Sick" in The Post of November 10, is splendid. Scarcely anyone can read it without deriving some benefit.

If we only knew how disgusting this alibi stuff is, we would stop indulging in it. Elbert Hubbard said, "Don't make excuses—make good." Another writer said, "We may often make excuses for others, but never for ourselves."

It seems as if this alibi drivel will never cease. Conditions here closely bordering on chaos together with an extremely precarious world situation may be laid to alibis. Yes, alibis are sickening.

L. G. HIGGINS.

Mr. Ickes On D. C. Police System.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Under date of October 25 The Washington Post, in an editorial entitled "Our Two Police Forces," urges the consolidation of the United States Park Police and the Metropolitan Police of the District of Columbia. After reading this editorial I am firmly convinced that your staff is not cognizant of several very important facts involved in the consolidation of these two distinct and separate organizations.

Let me first call your attention that similar mergers have been tried in other cities, and these experiments have been justified on the grounds of economy. Common sense demands that we recognize such grounds as mere pretense. It is only a matter of simple mathematics to know that a municipality requires policing in direct proportion to its population and area. At present the police force of the National Capital is sorely inadequate, and if we assume that the consolidation with the Park Police would result in an economy, we can only conclude that your editorial recommends that the number of men assigned to parks be reduced.

I have a firm conviction that in place of economy and increased efficiency, such a merger may prove an additional burden to the taxpayers of the District and impair many of the effective operations that now exist in the two forces. In the first place, the Park Police receive special training for their work, are familiar with the large metropolitan park system of the District of Columbia, and are in a better position to give efficient policing in the parks than would be a new force or a partially new force which might be introduced in the parks if a merger or consolidation takes place.

It has been the experience of cities maintaining a single police force that it is the general practice to relegate the older and less competent men to duty in the parks. It is a matter of record that this policy in certain municipalities produced the unwholesome result of permitting public parks to fall among the most unsafe places in the entire city. It would certainly be most unfortunate to have such a situation develop in the Capital of the Nation.

The intelligent and proper policing of park areas not only includes protection of private property and human life, but also the protection of a large public investment, which, in the case of Washington, is valued at approximately $300,000,000, and as I mentioned before, the Park Police are given special training in order to fit them for this particular type of work.

In the editorial the following statement is made: "The urgent necessity of enhancing safety in the parks puts a large responsibility upon the Superintendent of National Capital Parks to sponsor this obviously desirable consolidation." The Department of the Interior realizes and accepts its responsibility, and it is not desired to shift this burden nor to confuse jurisdictions.

It may also be added that the record of the United States Park Police bears testimony to the efficiency of this organization. Washington parks today may be considered as safe as the parks in any other large American municipality, and I should like to add that this public safety has been maintained with a very limited force which actually has been decreased by two men in the past five years, notwithstanding the fact that the population of the District of Columbia has shown an increase of nearly 100,000, while the park areas have been greatly expanded.

I am led to believe that the editorial in your paper of October 25 was probably inspired by a news article which appeared under date of October 23. This article was based upon the rumor that the Superintendent of National Capital Parks had requested the assignment of Metropolitan policemen, both for motorcycle and foot duty, in the park areas. This rumor is without foundation and is contrary to all of the facts in the case. It is true that, for reasons of economy, we call on the Metropolitan Police Department for certain facilities which are not maintained by the Park Police. Such facilities include police radio, patrol wagon service, call boxes, precinct stations, etc.

I should hesitate before calling on the Metropolitan Police for regular service in the Federal parks of the District of Columbia for two reasons. First, it would be fundamentally unsound to confuse jurisdictions. Second, from my observation of traffic conditions in the District of Columbia, particularly during the rush hours of morning and evening, it is clear that the Metropolitan Police could ill afford to divert the services of their personnel to other assignments.

Prefacing your editorial with the remark "new demands for consolidation of Washington's two largest police forces are a logical sequel to the recent brutal attack upon a young woman in Rock Creek Park" might lead the casual reader to believe that cases of this character occur most frequently in park areas. It should be made definitely clear that we have had few serious offenses of this type in the park system of the District of Columbia, and certainly, such offenses are not limited to parks. Only recently the newspapers have carried articles of a similar case which happened in the District of Columbia and not on park property.

Street Car Expenses.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have never been able to dismiss from my mind the opinion that a street-car company should be considered in the same light as any private corporation or firm, that is, that its expenditures should be regulated, as far as possible, according to its receipts.

Having this in mind, it will be recalled that a year or more ago the employes of the Capital Transit Co. asked for a wage increase, and the increase was granted by the company with very little protest on their part, and yet they almost immediately applied to the Utilities Commission for an increase in fare due to deficient revenues. In other words, they are passing the buck on to the street car patrons to foot the bill for the wage increase.

Now, I am wondering, had there been no Utilities Commission, whether the Transit Co. would have granted the wage increase so willingly. As it is, while they were considering the welfare of the Transit Co.'s employes, were they not forgetting the welfare of the many thousands of car patrons who are in no position to stand any increase in fare whatever, and many of these will be unable to invest 50 cents for tokens, and necessarily will be compelled to pay cash, or 10 cents straight. The Utilities Commission did not consider the poorer class of patrons even enough to grant them the privilege of buying three tokens for a quarter.

The Maxwell Case.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I know it would happen. The sob sisters are loose again. The letter of Marie C. Searles is a case exactly in point, wherein reference is made to Edith Maxwell's 'defense of her life in the murderous assault made on her by her drunken father."

May I suggest that Marie C. Searles review, in the "coldest neutrality, the evidence brought out at the trials?

The old man was not drunk. The evidence shows that he was cold sober at the time.

Did she hit him, with a slipper? The evidence shows that she probably used an ax. Edith Maxwell, her sister, and her mother were the only ones who mention a slipper. When they were first questioned about the father's death, they all said he fell down and struck his head on a meat block. As soon as they realized that this alibi would not hold water, however, then they remembered there was a slipper in the house.

Informed that a third trial had been denied her, Edith Maxwell began packing her suitcase without further ado. That shows manhood—or womanhood—on her part. That shows she has the courage to take her medicine without the lachrymose whinings of a 5-year-old. For Marie C. Searles to show similar fortitude would be highly commendable. LAWYER.

Women's Rights History.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Elizabeth Cady Stanton was not refused a seat as delegate to the London anti-slavery conference in 1840, as stated in a story printed in The Post of November 14, for the reason that she had not been appointed a delegate. Her husband, Henry Stanton, was a delegate, and she accompanied him to London.

There were several women delegates from the United States, all of whom were refused seats solely on account of their sex. One of these was Lucretia Mott. Mrs. Mott and Mrs. Stanton met for the first time in London. Both were inspired by the injustice done the women delegates to join forces later in initiating and promoting the movement to secure equal rights for women in the United States. These facts may have given some people the impression that Mrs. Stanton was herself one of these rejected delegates.

No doubt the information upon which your reporter based his statement was given him by someone he had reason to believe was a reliable authority. In order, however, to prevent the misstatement being repeated, perhaps reprinted, and so perpetuated, it seems well to correct it promptly.

The Admirer

FIRST Letter—"My dear Master: It is very bold of me to write to you, I have but one excuse, the admiration that I feel for your work. You cannot realize what your books have meant to me. You will forgive me for being unable to refrain from telling you so, and perhaps you will be so generous as to write me that this testimony of a reader has not left you indifferent. Be assured, dear master, of my respectful admiration.

"ROBERT BROQUETTE."

Reply—"Sir: Your letter touched me. A writer is never sure of himself. Sympathy reassures and comforts him. Gratefully and very cordially yours,

"BERTRAND SCHMITT."

* * *

Second letter—"My dear Master: I was overjoyed to recognize on an envelope the handwriting that could be no one's but yours. I had not dared hope for an answer. So much kindness emboldens me to the extent of broaching a subject that I purposely left out of my first letter. I myself, dear master, am an apprentice at the art of writing, which you have honored by so many masterpieces. I have written a novel, a comedy and several short stories, and friends to whom I have shown these efforts have assured me that they are not without merit. But what can an unfortunate man in the provinces do about it? You know, dear master, that publishers don't even open manuscripts from unknown authors. I should need someone to speak for me. I thought perhaps you might consent to read my novel and, if you like it, to recommend it. Naturally, should your opinion be unfavorable to me, I would ask for absolute frankness. Your advice is law to me. Be assured, dear master, of my affectionate admiration.

"ROBERT BROQUETTE."

Reply—"Dear Sir: I have much to do and little spare time. Besides, contrary to your belief, publishers have very cultivated readers who consider it a duty to read everything. But I do not want to disappoint you. Send me your manuscript. I shall do my best.

* * *

Third letter—"Dear Master: I am a bit worried. You have had my manuscript for two weeks and not a word from you. But perhaps you have already passed it on to a publisher and are awaiting his reply. In any event I am counting on hearing from you by return mail. With sincere admiration,

* * *

Reply—"Dear Sir: My, but you are in a hurry! If you could only conceive my life as it is, you would be more indulgent. However, I finally read your manuscript last night. To be more accurate, I ran through it, for because of your impatience I wanted to give you my first impression without delay. Here it is quite frankly: I believe it would be wrong for you to publish this novel in its present form. You have a theme and an environment, which is saying a lot, but the book is incomplete. Lay it aside for a few months; read the great masters—Balzac, Stendhal, Tolstoi; then return to your manuscript with a fresh perspective; you will see what must be modified. At that time I could probably give you a few useful suggestions. If you have not succeeded it is not lack of talent but lack of experience. Stick to your work, keep your eyes open, live, and one day you will be a novelist. BERTRAND SCHMITT."

* * *

Fourth letter—"Sir: I have not yet received the manuscript that you were to have sent me as soon as you had finished it. Your suggestions are more cautious than generous, but it is natural that authors who have arrived should wish to hold back the day when others will replace them. Devotedly yours.

* * *

Three months later in the Echo d'Yonville: "Bertrand Schmitt's latest novel is disconcertingly platitudinous. He is supposed to be one of our leading writers. Wooden characters, outmoded ideas, vulgar philosophy. Such mediocrity is astounding. May these lines written by a less famous but more exacting novelist serve as a tombstone for a book still-born.—Robert Broquette."

Five years later, in the catalogue of an autograph seller: "Schmitt, Bertrand, novelist and critic: Interesting series of four letters addressed to a young writer, 4 pages ½in.-8 (1931). He thanks him, encourages him and advises him to wait before publishing a book: 'If you have not succeeded, it is not lack of talent, but lack of experience . . . Stick to your work, keep your eyes open and one day you will be a novelist . . .' Each, 75 francs."

On Tipping.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Re your editorial of today in regards to tipping, the consensus of opinion in my office is that you are entirely mistaken in this matter.

We tip for services well rendered. We do not feel that this should be considered as part of the wages that they are to expect from their employer. The employer pays his employe for work that the employe is to do. If, by his graciousness, willingness and particular helpfulness an employe receives a tip, it is not merely for the ordinary routine work, it is for work well done.

Incidentally, in many cases, the tips are kept by the employers! Or, didn't you know this?

Don't forget, too, that in many, many cases the people who will be affected by the minimum wage law work in such places where tips are an infinitesimal part of their total remuneration. A READER.

Fair Enough

F. C. C. In Glass House.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT that henceforth the Federal Communications Commission will live in a glass house has a hallelujah sound, and there will be rejoicing in heaven over this repentance, if that is what it amounts to. But the record of the recent past remains unfinished business.

This commission has authority to grant or deny valuable broadcasting rights to private individuals or corporations, and the decision to move in a goldfish bowl might be an attempt to obviate a Congressional inquiry as to whether such gifts have been granted as political rewards or denied by way of political reprisal. It is also possible, under the authority of the commission, to favor the applications of those who have dealt generously with persons who are politically or otherwise near and dear to the Administration, and the conditions are such that the commission should have lived in a glass house all the time.

Not having done so, the commission, if it has confidence in its past, not only should be willing to submit to an examination of its record and motives and the political connections of successful and unsuccessful applicants but should demand such inquiry in justice to itself and to an Administration which is very fastidious about ethics and morals.

• • • •

SUCH AN INQUIRY, to comport with the high ethical and moral quality of the Administration, should be conducted in the same tone of voice that sounded throughout the banking and holding companies investigations and the expose of cunning little devices having the color of legality contained in certain income tax returns. A committee proceeding in this frame of mind would show no deference to the political or family relationships of persons involved in dealings under investigation and would include in its majority report a restatement of the importance of ethics and morals in case they seem to have been forgotten.

By the estimate of the President himself in a recent fireside chat, and of Mr. Farley in an oration last week, the radio has become so important a means of education in public affairs that obviously the air is a great national treasure belonging to all the people. It is much more important than Teapot Dome, and any allocation of broadcasting rights done under the influence of politics or, unthinkably, of direct or indirect bribery would be proportionately more evil. Yet, unfortunately, the air and the law are such that the commission has been placed in an uncomfortable position, because it is charged with the duty of assigning impartially valuable concessions or licenses on its own judgment.

Even a commission dwelling in a glass house must make painful decisions between insistent and suspicious applicants, and so must endure a certain amount of unjust criticism from those who feel that they have been victims of discrimination. The short duration of the license term may be criticized as a means of reminding the licensees that they had better be good, but any other term, whether indefinite or for a number of years, could be criticized just as severely.

• • • •

UP TO NOW there has been no Congressional investigation of any branch of the New Deal comparable with the memorable liver-shakers of other times. No administration likes trouble of this kind, but this one struck off on a strange course when Congressman "Ham" Fish was told that he might enter the income tax inquiry only on condition that he promise not to refer to the tax returns of one of his constituents named Franklin D. Roosevelt.

And the Administration went further on that course when Congressman Treadway, of Massachusetts, was refused the services of tax experts to analyze the returns of Jimmy Roosevelt, of which he said for the Record, "I saw enough of them to know that Mr. Roosevelt's income was very much larger than any young insurance agent would ordinarily have in the natural flow of business."

Agreed that the radio is all that the President and Mr. Farley say it is, the move into the glass house prompts a reasonable interest in the goings-on at the commission before moving day.

That Fiend, The Employer.

("The trouble is that no one in the country gives a thought to the 5,000,000 employers. We are picking on them, abusing them and snooping on them. Yet the only place anybody can get a real job is from a private employer."—Chairman O'Connor of the House Rules Committee.)

Never mind the vile employer—
Never give the guy a break;
Pick away until he's groggy,
For your dear old country's sake!
Criticize his every motive,
Heap invective on his brow—
Maybe once the boy was human,

II.

Keep on picking—he can take it—
Never say a kindly word;
Any hint that he is hornless
Is quite funny and absurd.
Other folks may have some virtues,
But the business man has none;
Flay him as a sort of cockroach—
It is lots of good clean fun!

III.

It is stylish to abuse him
And to keep your punches low;
If he dares to make an answer
Point and sneer, "I told you so!"
He alone can give employment
And speed up prosperity,
But the fashion is to bar him
From the slightest sympathy.

IV.

The professor and the doctor—
The mechanic and the clerk—
They are flawless and high-minded—
Not a duty do they shirk;
But that low employer person—
What a low and wicked type!
Any comment in his favor
Is quite obviously tripe.

V.

Never grant him any ethics—
Never think he has a soul;
Only men who smear and hoot him
Shine upon the honor roll;
Hunt him early in the morning;
Dog his footsteps all the day;
You will know him when you see him—
He has cloven hoofs, they say.

VI.

Oh, the rattlesnake has good points,
And the white shark isn't bad,
Even polecats have their virtues,
As have buzzards, too, my lad;
But employers? Why, they've nothing!
They're the lowest of the low,
As must be apparent, dearies,
If you own a radio!

Brussels And Peace

Correspondent Sees American Public Opinion As Holding Key To Success Or Failure Of Peace Efforts; Far East Conference.

By Europax.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Brussels.

BEHIND THIS whole Nine-Power Conference lies the single question, Can public opinion in the United States be mobilized in time to prevent the next world war?

This is no overstatement, startling and sweeping as it may seem. Brussels may appear to be a long way from Washington; but the link between the two—though it goes the long way round and zigzags through Tokyo, Shanghai, Moscow, Berlin, Rome and London—is nevertheless direct and inescapable.

For what, after all, is the Brussels Conference on the Far East?

Considered simply as another international parley, it is of no real importance. It was doomed to failure before it met, insofar as its logical aim, checking Japanese invasion of China, is concerned. Furthermore all the participants were perfectly well aware of this even before they arrived in Brussels.

But the Nine-Power Conference is not by any means just another international parley. Even if it seems to be an unmitigated failure, it is likely to prove, in the long run, a tremendously significant event.

Primarily, this Brussels Conference is the first tangible manifestation of a changing American attitude toward world affairs. It is an admittedly experimental affair, a vague but determined groping for something to replace neutrality as a means of keeping the United States out of war.

How Far Will U. S. Co-operate.

I DO NOT mean merely that this is the principal significance of the conference for America and Americans. To the other delegations here as well, it has become more and more apparent that the essential point of the Brussels parley is the extent to which the United States is ready and willing to co-operate in solving the problem of peace; and that this, in turn, depends almost entirely on American public opinion.

It is hardly an exaggeration to say that the world today presents the picture of a conflict between two public opinions. On the side of this conflict are the public opinions of the dictatorial countries, particularly Germany, Italy and Japan. These public opinions are completely mobilized, virtually on a war footing. They are enlisted in the terrific struggle of their governments to wrest a bigger "place in the sun" from someone else. In the case of Italy and Germany especially, these public opinions are disciplined and regimented, and, in short, capable of being hurled headlong into war on a few hours' notice —literally overnight.

On the other side are the public opinions of the democratic countries of the world, notably the United States, Great Britain and France. In these democracies, public opinion is not regimented. It is not disciplined. It is not docile nor mobilized, but on the contrary it is very stubbornly intractable, passionately desirous of peace and determined to exercise its political sovereignty to compel its governments to avoid war.

The contrast is certainly dramatic; the problem is to keep it from being tragic. For the very fact that the public opinions in the democratic countries want peace and are able to put pressure on their leaders to preserve it encourages the dictators to go ahead in their lawless expansionist projects, sure of their own public opinions if they should need them for war and fairly sure that the peaceful public opinions of the democracies will allow them to get what they want without having to go to war for it.

Determined Show Of Force May Save Peace.

WHAT IS the answer? Is it not clearly this: That a time will come when the grabbing dictators will overstep themselves and precipitate a war, unless public opinion in the three big democratic countries can be aroused, or mobilized, to a point where it understands and realizes the necessity of taking the risks necessary to call the bluff of Japan, Germany and Italy before they expand to such an extent that they cannot be stopped except by war.

In other words, it is at least probable, though not certain, that Japan, Germany and Italy could today be stopped and pacified by a really serious and determined show of united force by America, Britain and France. But tomorrow, or the day after, if the democracies continue to give way without offering any evidence of their stamina or attempting to draw the line, a display of force will no longer be enough—there will have to be use of force.

These were the ideas behind President Roosevelt's speech at Chicago, when he said that neutrality and isolationism were not enough to keep America out of war. And these are the ideas that underlie the presence of the American delegation at Brussels and the policy followed by Mr. Norman Davis and his colleagues at the Nine-Power Conference.

President Roosevelt sent Norman Davis to Europe because he realized that public opinion in the United States is at present in a state of flux. The American people are puzzled. They want peace, but they are no longer confident they can get it through neutrality. They are beginning to realize that there are certain countries in the world ruled by individuals or groups which respect nothing but force and which have nothing but contempt for the rights of others or for treaty obligations which they themselves have signed. In other words, it is unfortunately becoming obvious that, internationally as well as within nations, there are outlaws who must be arrested if the world is to enjoy any tranquillity. No one will be safe, no one will be really at peace, until the reign of international law and order is restored.

First Move Must Come From America.

THIS conviction is held by the President and by his representatives at Brussels, and it is unquestionably filtering down through public opinion in the United States, as well as in France and Britain. But the situation in these two European democracies inherent in war makes it easier for their governments to act. Then, too, their public opinions, though pacific, are more easily molded than popular sentiment in the United States.

Thus it is possible to say that, given American support, the governments of France and Britain can speak for their publics on the question of concerted action to restore international order; while in America the Administration must wait for the public to speak before it can act. Clearly, therefore, the first move must come from the American people.

These American people certainly have no intention of going to war—or even of running the risk of being involved in war—over anything in the Far East. No business interests alone could ever make them speak out to the President in Washington and to Mr. Davis in Brussels: "Go ahead and find some way to stop these dictatorial bandits; we'll back you up." But is there not something bigger at stake in China today—in Europe tomorrow if Japan "gets away with it"—which may after all be worth fighting for, if necessary —that minimum of law and order in world-affairs without which civilization cannot continue?

It is because the Administration in Washington believes this, and believes that the great majority of the people of the United States either feel this way already or will look at things this way when the situation is made clear to them, that Mr. Norman Davis came to Brussels. He came to sound out the other democratic countries, to see whether they seem ready to take a stand, together and if possible in concert with America, against international lawlessness.

Thus the Brussels Conference is a tremendously important testing time, and a significant object lesson. Everything possible is being done here to find a peaceful solution to the Far Eastern conflict. Conciliation, mediation—every conceivable pacific means to restore peace is being tried first. If they fail, the American people—and public opinion in the democracies generally—will have all the facts before them, and they will then have to decide. Are they ready or will they be ready in the near future to authorize Mr. Davis to go ahead in Brussels—or London or Paris—with precise plans for genuinely effective joint action by America, England, the Dominions and France designed to restore the rule of law and the reign of order in the world, even at the risk of having to fight for it? Peace, real peace, is at that price.

Man's Own War

By Evelyn Walker

'Hath Not The Potter.'

"O man who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the things formed say to him that formed it: why hast thou made me thus?

"Or hath not the potter power over the clay of the same lump, to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?" (St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans—Chapter ix, vs. 21-22.)

• • • •

IN MR. VAN DER MEERSCH'S novel, "Invasion," he dealt with a war of nations which shook the universe and scarred the face of the earth. "Hath Not the Potter" does not deal with soldiers as such, or the warfare between armed forces, but of the eternal struggle of man at all times. A belief that this is a world in which all things live in a constant state of strife, and at the bottom of which there is always an implication of battle, permeates this new novel of Flanders fields. The action is set on the banks of the slow sluggish Lys and in Antwerp, "fruitful and opulent." Yet it is not of peacefulness and richness he writes, but of storm-tossed landscapes, of violence and brutality.

Van Bergen, the protagonist, seems to be a projection of the author's self. A writer who longs to be identified as the bard of Antwerp and its countryside, a disciple of the doctrine of strength, adoring bigness and violence of all kinds, a barbarian at heart, but generous and high-minded, he lived with joyous abundant vitality. He longed to express the sad airy carillon of the Cathedral's bells answering with medieval charm the "muted moaning sirens" of Antwerp's modern harbor—to tell in words what Ruysdael put on canvas—a flat monotonous country dotted by the white towers of windmills with their black and brown sails, "the cutting wind, and over all the dark sweep of the storm cloud." The structure of his mind was essentially Nordic marked by a "love of the violent, the severe, the massive, combined with occasional moods of sweetness and poignant tenderness." And as was his mind, so is this book.

Van Bergen had promised an "armful of happiness" to two women, his wife, Wilfreda, and her niece, Kareline. He succeeds in bringing them the bittersweet of a three-cornered love. Tragedy shatters their lives until his child unites them in peace.

• • • •

THE SETTING, whether it be Antwerp, "athirst for life no less than for eternity" or the well-diked gray countryside, with its quaint customs, dominates the story. Plot and character are dwarfed and brushed aside save where violence rears its head. Then, in the telling of the drab details of the smugglers' trade and of their monstrous dogs maddened by brutal training; of Karelina's life with her bestial husband, Gomar, where the nights were "hideous with brawling and riotous mirth" or of the primitive savagery of cockfighting, minutely described in all its brutality; the setting yields place for a moment, and in sympathy is melancholy, weird and wild.

Although the keynote of the book is violence, there are times when it seems to rest, lulled into tranquillity by the slow revolving sails of the windmills. It is then that we see "the melancholy stillness of All Saints Day;" the ideally happy married love of Van Bergen and Wilfreda; the peasants working in the fields of flax, and the well-watered lands placid with tall lime trees and lush meadows.

• • • •

THE CHARACTER of Karelina is weakly drawn. That of Gomar in contrast stands out strongly. A huge figure of a man, every feature telling of strength, caution, craftiness and obstinacy, he was, when sober, taciturn, brutal, extravagant in his pleasures, coarse, but not deliberately ill-natured. But his sober days were few, and so more frequently his true nature showed. Then, as a bully and braggart, fighting, beating his wife, making drunken love to any and every woman, full of such fiendish tricks that even his vicious dogs slunk away, he became as a wild beast might be. The life of Karelina was one of abject misery. It was from such sordid surroundings that Domitien Van Bergen rescued her, offering her the sanctuary of his home in Antwerp. Peace and happiness were her lot with Domitien and Wilfreda until Destiny, combined with the return of Comar, thrust tragedy upon her.

In the French title "L'Empreinte de dieu," much more than in the American one, "Hath Not the Potter," is found the suggestion of that dynamic fatalism which streaks the book. Destiny hangs over the characters bending their wills and shaping their lives. As in Hardy's novels, they feel a constant confused melancholy like a forboding of evil and are driven relentlessly on the path which fate has plotted out. Unlike Hardy's characters, however, the destiny of Wilfreda and Karelina leads them eventually out of strife and misery into the peace of sacrifice—"a sad and tranquil joy."

"Hath Not the Potter" comes to the American reader bearing the Goncourt prize. It deserves, without question, a distinguished place among the tons of literature which monthly inundate the country. Compared with the average novel it almost achieves greatness, but, unfortunately, when compared with great literature, it must take a lower seat. There is lacking in it that intangible quality which stirs and holds the interest of all times.

THE MOST PERFECT short, short story I have ever seen is contained in one paragraph out of X. M. Boulestin's new book "The Finer Cooking" . . . It might be entitled "The Cocktail Party" and it runs as follows:

"Yet a successful cocktail party means crowding over a hundred people in two rooms which can hold 40. It does not matter what there is on the buffet table, for nobody can approach it except those who, having got there first, have to remain pressed and glued against it, sandwiched between guests, as they cannot fight their way through the incoming tide. The only thing to do is to keep a set smile on your face, make idiotic remarks which no one can possibly hear, wave a hand, if there is room to lift it, to somebody you would like to talk to (so near, yet so far), consume if possible without upsetting it on yours or the next frock, your warm cocktail, and wait for the end . . ."

Mushrooms in The Basement of the Monument?

IT'S CERTAINLY intriguing. And it's pretty hard to figure out just what the secret is.

Everybody knows that the Washington Monument is a perfectly respectable building. And, after all, even the most suspicious of reporters wouldn't go down there in search of deep-dyed mystery.

TOM McCARTHY.

It may be, of course, that the Department of Agriculture is raising mushrooms in the Monument's cellar . . . if the Monument has a cellar. Or even that the Weather Bureau is conducting esoteric experiments in the higher altitudes near the monument's peak. But even those possibilities don't seem sufficient for that air of insurmountable mystery.

Yes, sir, it's got me worried. It isn't as if I'd gone down to the Monument looking for mystery and hushed secrecy. It certainly wasn't my intention to pry into the private affairs of the Government of these United States. And, much less was it my intention to take up arms against the National Park Service.

The first of the park policemen I talked with aroused my suspicions only a little bit. He answered the first question with a grin . . . and then he discovered that I was a reporter. He stopped short, looked around cautiously and, finding that the coast was clear, he resumed.

• • • •

"YES, THE tourists do ask a lot of silly questions," he said in a hushed tone, all the time glancing from side to side. "Some of them even drive up and ask what building this is.

"Some of their questions are really dizzy. I've heard them ask if there's one elevator to carry them up and another elevator to carry them down. Of course, all of them want to know how thick the walls are and how many steps there are to the top.

"But the prize question of the lot was one asked last year. Workmen were 'pointing up' the outside of the Monument. One of the tourists asked me what they were doing. I told him they were 'pointing up' the Monument. "What's the matter," the tourist wanted to know, "did the old point wear out?"

The park policeman chuckled a little at that, but he never lost that harried look, and he kept glancing from side to side. He had me jumpy before I was halfway through talking with him, but I didn't want to come right out and ask what was the trouble.

All the time, the tourists kept milling around, and one lady was boasting that she was using a guide book she'd kept on her kitchen shelf in Pennsylvania for the past 15 years. She said she'd always known she'd have another chance to use it. And one man said that he'd timed the elevator ride the last time he'd been in Washington and it took 75 seconds. He was back to see if the time had been cut down any.

When any tourists came near, the guard's voice dropped to a whisper and I could barely make out what he was saying.

"They do ask some funny things," he whispered. "One man wanted to know if he could see West Point from the Monument's peak. We told him that he probably couldn't, because West Point was a couple of hundred miles away on the Hudson River.

• • • •

"OF COURSE," whispered the guard, "a lot of them think they should be able to see Chesapeake Bay from the Monument. They figure it's just outside the city limits.

"As for the things they want to see most, well they all want to see the White House from the Monument and, since the court controversy, they're all anxious to glimpse the Supreme Court from the air.

"But the question that gets me," said the guard, "is one that almost everyone asks. They want to know how many feet the Monument sways at the top. And, he looked about carefully before he concluded in a tone tense with excitement, "and I don't think it sways at all."

By that time, the air of mystery had reached frightening proportions. I felt almost like a conspirator and I considered taking a quick turn around the Monument in order to pull myself together.

However, I decided to try another of the park policemen on duty, in the hope of getting a little more information, and possibly a clew to the air of mystery.

"A reporter?" the park policeman said, drawing himself up to his full 6 feet. "I have nothing to say."

"Come on now, just a little human interest story. Something about the tourists."

He looked from side to side furtively and then said, "I can't talk. Orders are that all stories come through the main office." Then he turned away and put his hands behind his back.

Maybe they are growing mushrooms in the basement of the Washington Monument, at that. There's certainly altogether too much hushed secrecy for me to figure out.

Smithsonian Study Endangers Meter Of 'Swanee River'

Stephen Foster probably wouldn't think much of the latest project of the Smithsonian Institution. Its ethnologists are busy working out a translation of the word Swanee. If they substantiate their present theory, Foster's "Old Folks at Home" will live, not 'way down upon the Swanee River, but merely "'way down South." This may be good ethnology, but it's pretty poor meter.

Swanee, according to Ethnologist John R. Swanton, is a corruption of Shawnee, a tribe of gypsy-like Indians. The Shawnees received their name, which is Indian for southern, when they wandered down to Georgia. Dr. Swanton believes they may have lived along the Swanee, and given it their name.

Dr. Swanson's theory is revolutionary in ethnological circles, where Swanee always has been considered a coruption of "San Juanito," or Little St. John, which early Spanish settlers called the river.

The only hitch in the new hypothesis is that Dr. Swanton can find no proof that the Shawnees ever actually lived along the Swanee. Surviving members of the tribe make their home in Oklahoma.

New York, Nov. 16 (U.P.).—A new business concern came to the rescue today of men who forget to kiss their wives, blondes who can't remember whether they promised to meet the guy in the Astor lobby or in front of the corner cigar store, and Congressmen who fail to recall what they promised the voters.

Trujillo Delays U. S. Mediation In Massacre

Dominican President Asks Clarification of Points to Be Covered.

By the Associated Press.

The United States Government's effort to mediate a crisis between the Dominican Republic and Haiti received an unexpected setback last night when President Trujilleo of the former country asked President Roosevelt for a "clarification" of his offer of good offices.

Mr. Roosevelt telegraphed the Presidents of both countries Sunday that the United States would be happy to join with Mexico and Cuba in giving its "friendly services" toward pacific solution of the controversy which has brought about tense relations.

Haiti has charged that a number of Haitian laborers have been slain in the Dominican Republic, where they were employed.

President Roosevelt acted after he had received a request from President Vincent of Haiti that the United States collaborate with Mexico and Cuba in offering its good offices to mediate the crisis.

President Trujillo replied to that message today, the State Department said, with a request for clarification of the points on which the United States and the other mediating governments propose to deal. State Department officials, who withheld the text of the Dominican President's communication, described it as neither a refusal nor an acceptance of the mediation proposal.

Ciudad Trujillo, Nov. 16 (AP).—President Rafael Leonidas Trujillo of the Dominican Republic said today his government was surprised that President Stenio Vincent of Haiti had asked the United States, Cuba and Mexico to mediate a Dominican-Haitian border conflict.

Replying to messages from the Presidents of the United States, Cuba and Mexico, in which their "friendly services" were offered, the Dominican President said:

"The petition for your good offices, as formulated by the Haitian government, surprised the Dominican government because there exists a diplomatic accord between the two governments under which the Dominican government was obliged to make necessary investigations for the facts and to impose upon those guilty the sanctions they merit."

THE FEDERAL DIARY

By Scott Hart.

Uncle Sam: Employer: IV

The Reorganization Plan, as you know, looks to an overhauling of the Civil Service Commission for better or for worse . . . The chief difficulty that thousands have found with the commission in the past is a difficulty for which the commission is not responsible; it is not responsible for its delays when the Congress has provided it with insufficient personnel and otherwise treated it like an unwanted stepchild.

But the commission probably should take the blame for one generally-frowned-on practice: The thing of almost discouraging entry into the Federal service of those who have no college education or a string of academic degrees . . . But even that practice has its advocates; certainly the higher educators of the land seem to approve of it . . . And it should be noted that the commission, in the past 10 days, has indicated that it would seek talent wherever it may be found, and the demonstration of this principle is going to be of interest to watch . . . But you will admit that in the past it has been difficult to crash the service without at least one little sheepskin in your pocket.

And then all of this theory goes into an enterprise that allows for little—except in the very highest jobs—of any original thought or latitude; it is all such routine as a bank affords . . . Many have derided, with the prettiest scorn, the commission's stickling for degrees, saying that under such policy George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, Benjamin Franklin and United States Senator Carter Glass would be barred from Federal service, not to speak of those gifted persons who penned Holy Writ . . .

Merit System Backed.

But the employes, being the "ins," aren't burnt up over this . . . But those who had to struggle through Civil Service examinations are sore about the patronage grab bag and want a merit system that is one, indeed . . . Even some of the Congressmen want a merit system that is one, indeed, notably Representative Ramspeck . . . But the employes don't look to the present special session to bring relief in this connection, the employes not being men given to any beliefs in sudden magic . . . They would, however, like to see—while things are being done—something worked out that would make more equitable the Federal old-age outlook.

At the moment many have no retirement feature, these not being under the civil service . . . And working for Uncle Sam: Employer, they do not come within the embrace of the Social Security boon . . . Their number in the District of Columbia is something like 37,000, and outside, about 273,000 . . .

The Congressmen should understand that it has been a trifle difficult to organize and get steam-up action regarding Federal retirement, because only two living persons understand its technicalities and wild flights into the unfathomable; these two persons are A. F. G. E.'s Mr. Alcorn and N. F. F. E.'s Mr. Biller, the latter having studied it during all his waking hours for 12 years and contending that he has only reached the primer of retirement's difficulties.

Jail Conditions Cited.

Again, employes and others have said the Congress should do something about the conditions at the District of Columbia Jail, a bastille that at times holds some very tough fellows . . . Those with feelings in this direction say that the Congress could not be aware that the keepers, male and female, work seven days a week and think that conditions are improving when, by some strange turn of events, they get a few minutes in which to eat a lunch . . . And at the last, there are the custodial employes to be heard, this group claiming to be the old original forgotten man, despite the $60-a-year boost that, of course, helped, but didn't raise the bottom much, they feel . . . They have five major demands now for Congressional laps, which are: Enactment of H. R. 2699, providing higher pay scales; $1,100 base pay for charmen and charwomen, $1,300 for head charman and charwoman; extension of the 8-in-10 hour law to include custodial workers; opportunity for promotional examinations, and credit for accumulated sick leave after promotion . . . They don't like "misassignments" or the "average" clause, and so having fired, they step back to see what will happen . . .

The articles have touched the high points of complaint (though not at any length). They have presented at least a surface picture of the field the Congress hopes to set in order. And if nothing whatever is done about any of it, the employes will be least surprised. Even in this high-jinks day, when the Government roofs a land of abundant life, the Government clerks still know the art of patience. That is, most of them do.

War Drives Mme. Salvi To Renew Career Here

Driven from her native land by the Spanish civil war, Margarita Salvi, coloratura soprano, will arrive in Washington this week to take the role of Rosina in "The Barber of Seville," to be presented at Constitution Hall next Monday.

Turning from Spain to Paris, and Milan, Salvi found that restrictions on performances by foreign artists made the continuation of her operatic career in Europe almost impossible, so she has returned to the United States, where for several seasons she sang with the Chicago Civic Opera.

DO GOLFERS APPRECIATE CAMEL'S COSTLIER TOBACCOS?

IT means a lot that famous golfers—like Gene Sarazen, Helen Hicks, Tony Manero, Lawson Little, and Ralph Guldahl—agree in their preference for one cigarette—Camel. They have found... as you'll find too...that the costlier tobaccos in Camels do place this great cigarette in a class apart. Listen to Ralph Guldahl, National Open Champion: "The fact that I've stuck to Camels for 10 years speaks for itself," he says. "I smoke lots of Camels and I've never known them to jangle my nerves. That partly explains why so many golfers are loyal Camel smokers."

And not only golfers, but people in all walks of life—millions of Americans—prefer Camels day after day, making them the LARGEST-SELLING cigarette in America . . . or the world.

SALESGIRL Elsie Schumacher says: "When the rush gets me 'worn out'—it's me for a Camel, and I get a quick 'lift.' Practically all of us girls in the store prefer Camels."

SPORTS WRITER S. Cameron: "I know many great athletes intimately. It's impressive how champions agree on Camels. I'm glad as any athlete that Camels don't get on my nerves."

BANK TELLER John McMahon: "With Camels I get a lot out of smoking. I'm handling money by the thousands. Jangled nerves just don't fit in that kind of work. So it's Camels for me."

WATCHMAKER I. C. Gorkun says: "Say, every Camel I smoke seems to be tastier than the last. Camels don't leave me feeling 'smoked out' no matter how many times a day I light one up."

DRAFTSMAN B. T. Miller: "I smoke steadily. Camels never tire my taste. I often feel used up during long hours before the drawing board. Camels give me a 'lift' when I feel I need it."

AUTO MECHANIC Al Patterson: "In the garage business you catch your meals on the run. Camels seem to smooth the way for good digestion. The Mrs. smokes Camels too because they hit the spot."

CHIEF SIGNALMAN on the N. Y. Central, John Geraghty: "You don't have to be a railroad man to know that speed and safety call for healthy nerves. Do Camels jangle my nerves? No sir!"

Connie Spurns Art; Lawyers Shush Connie

Pogany Portrait Causes Famous Star Anguish and Some Anger.

By Frederick C. Othman.

Hollywood, Nov. 16 (U.P.).—Constance Bennett's lawyers shushed her today in hope of keeping Willy Pogany, the celebrated artist, from suing her not once, but twice.

Willy painted a portrait of the lovely Constance, worked on it for six months, and delivered it to her with a bill for $3,500. Constance took one look, she claimed, and called for the smelling salts. She also shipped her portrait back to Pogany with the notation that it didn't look like her. Diplomatic, she was.

But she wasn't diplomatic enough. Pogany sent the picture back to her for the last time and—quickly—before she could return it again, sued her for the $3,500.

It was at this point that she lost patience. What she had to say about the artistry of Pogany would have made elegant reading, if it hadn't been for the lawyers. They said, "Please, don't print a line of it, else Pogany could sue Miss Bennett again—for libel.

We had a look at the picture which is causing all the trouble, and though we're no artist ourself, it looks mighty nice to us. It shows the lovely Miss Bennett in a silvery evening dress, reclining on a cushion so that her hips are revealed as the slimmest and the sveltest in all Hollywood.

To Arms! To Arms!

The hips are all to the good, insofar as Miss Bennett is concerned. The arms are what worry her. Pogany painted them bare and pink and luscious-looking, but not streamlined enough to suit his patroness.

She said they were entirely too fat to be her arms. That wasn't all she said, but the lawyers still are listening, so you'll have to imagine the rest.

Miss Bennett, once the highest paid acress in Hollywood, is working (or will be as soon as she recovers from a touch of the flu) for Hal Roach, the two-reel comedy king who has turned feature-picture producer, in "Merrilly We Live."

Roach has spent so much cash on this film he admits cheerfully that Hal Roach, Inc., will be no more if it fizzles. He predicts as cheerfully that it will be one whale of a success. If it isn't he may have to revive his ill-fated deal to produce grand operas on celluloid, with the co-operation of Mussolini.

Roach has studded the cast of his newest venture with such stars as Brian Aherne, Billie Burke, Alan Mowbray, Clarence Kolb, Bonita Granville, Marjorie Rambeau, Tom Brown, Phillip Reed, Marjorie Kane and Patsy Kelly, all playing in support of Miss Bennett.

He has in addition built such sets as even some of the biggest studios here have never seen. One of them shows a stone mansion, complete with lawns, oak trees, gravel drives, flower beds and a five-car garage, built inside the gloomy recesses of a sound stage.

Nature, Real and Reel.

The trees are real but embalmed. The grass is fake, the flowers are genuine, and the masonry is made of paper, but the whole business looks exactly like the real thing. Director Norman Z. McLeod, who is a cartoonist of note when he isn't a director, said that this set cost plenty—but that it still was an economy.

"We could have rented somebody's front yard," he said, "and the rental cost would have been comparatively small, but with our expensive cast we feared the autumn fogs (apologies to the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce). We figured a couple of postponements—with the salaries going on as usual—would eat up all the profits."

The other set, on a stage next door, shows the inside of this same mansion. Roach is particularly proud of it because all the rooms are built in their proper perspective. The camera can look htrough open doors and see from room to room, without any technical skullduggery whatever. Such scenes usually are made possible only by mechanical trickery, because the average studio set contains only one room at a time.

Tree Problem Is Easy for Botanist

James Stewart's knowledge of botany stood him in good stead on location at Lake Arrowhead with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Benefits Forgot" company. A tourist, wandering about the set, accosted Stewart and remarked that he didn't think they had pine trees in Ohio. "Oh, yes," remarked Stewart. "They have five varieties. The Ohio River was originally lined with pines, but as settlers cleared timber, other trees replaced them. I learned it in college."

Location Lunch Trailer Novelty

Even though they're now working inside the studio, the cast of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Everybody Sing" now enjoys location lunches—thanks to Allan Jones' new trailer.

On the set Fanny Brice remarked that she wished they could have two hours for lunch so she could eat there. The rest agreed that it was a good idea, but an hour wouldn't permit them to do so.

When lunch was called, Jones invited them into his trailer and drove to the beach where lunch was served on the sand.

Jones had a cook fix the lunch while they were driving to the beach, and thus they were able to make the complete trip in an hour.

Garbo Fan.

Reginald Owen, appearing in "Everybody Sing," thinks Garbo is the greatest actress on the screen, and attends each of her pictures at least five times.

'Unseen Chess.'

The Best of the Naval Academy Films Will Be Seen in 'Navy Blue and Gold'

Picture Opening at the Capitol on Friday Is Film of Unusual Appeal and Power; Warners Announce New Paramount Bookings; More of "The Ghost of Yankee Doodle;" Variety's Distinguished Guests.

IN ITS simple and uninformed way, this column shuddered slightly and quivered a bit inwardly when informed that "Navy Blue and Gold" was to be substituted for Edward G. Robinson in "The Last Gangster" as the film feature to be splashed on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater for the week beginning Friday.

BELL.

At first blush it looked surprisingly as if a pretty powerful piece of footage had been yanked in favor of "just another Annapolis picture," if you know what I mean. They have been produced more or less by the gross here of late. Or such was our dull-witted notion.

Then, yesterday afternoon, "Navy Blue and Gold" was run over the sprockets at the usual Chewsday afternoon drama-desk preview in the private projection room of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Exchange. I bow deep obeisance, scrape my twisted schnozzola in the dust and promise never to do it again.

In "Navy Blue and Gold," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has created far and away the best picture ever made of life at the U. S. Naval Academy. It bubbles with humor, has a nice love story, a dash of athletics and packs the emotional punch of drama that hits straight and hard to the heart. And the marvel of this tremendous emotional wallop is that it is wholly masculine—a young midshipman's heroic sacrifice to clear the name of his father, a Navy man before him, court-martialed out of the service because he wouldn't shift blame for a catastrophe at sea to a dead navigator, where it belonged.

If some of the edge seems to be taken off all this by the statement that the picture is climaxed by an Army-Navy football game that is won in the last quarter, it is only because you have not as yet seen this particular recreation of a great national pageant and a terrific gridiron struggle.

The thing has been perfectly cast, with Robert Young, James Stewart and Tom Brown in the principal roles, bulwarked by such supporting players as Lionel Barrymore, Florence Rice, Billie Burke, Paul Kelly, Samuel S. Hinds, Barnett Parker, Frank Albertson, Minor Watson and scores more.

In every department of production "Navy Blue and Gold" is a superlative picture and 1,000 per cent entertainment. Go see for yourself.

• • • •

Another argument on the side of this sure-fire smash, as opposed to "The Last Gangster" as a perfect booking for next week, is that it will divide honors on the bill with Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians. The spirit of the picture coincides identically with the collegiate enthusiasm that always has characterized the stage activities of this splendid musical organization. One hesitates to bring up "Varsity Show" in the same sentence with "Navy Blue and Gold," but the allusion may serve a useful purpose as a suggestion of comparable tempo and clean-cut youthful approach. Miss Mell Merkley, the coed publicist for the Pennsylvanians, from Sacramento, Calif., and making her first visit to the Capital, was present at yesterday's preview and forgot for a moment that she was supposed to be selling Fred's band!

Paramount productions for the second quarter of the 1937-38 season, allotted to the Warner interests in Washington, have been definitely booked for the Earle Theater and duly announced by Zone Manager John J. Payette, through Dan Terrell's typewriter and Frank LeFalce's megaphone.

Among the releases coming to town first are "The Big Broadcast of 1938," in which W. C. Fields makes his return to the cinema after a long and desperate illness; "Wells Fargo," Frank Lloyd's dramatization of the growth of transportation in America, with Joel McRea and Frances Dee; Mae West's "Every Day's a Holiday," another of her explorations into the mauve mysteries of those "Gay Nineties," and "The Barrier," a new picturization of the Rex Beach story, with James Ellison, Jean Parker and Leo Carrillo.

There's gold in them thar thrills!

It is almost always possible to find one of her cousins tucked away somewhere in the cast of an Ethel Barrymore play. In "Scarlet Sister Mary," it was Georgia Drew Mendum, if memory serves correctly—as it so frequently doesn't—and in "The Ghost of Yankee Doodle," now at the National, it is John Drew Devereaux, who plays the role of Roger Garrison, the conservative newspaper publisher. In the present play this perpetuation of a fine old family tradition is quite in keeping with the subject matter of the Sidney Howard script.

Another fine actor in the National cast is George Nash, in the role of the Honorable Edward Callory, once a Senator, but now legal adviser to the bank that holds the destiny of the Garrison family in the hollow of its hand, as the saying is. It is pleasant to remember the nerve-tingling door key with which Mr. Nash galvanized the climax of Augustus Thomas' play of "The Witching Hour," at Wallack's Theater in New York a mere matter of 30 years ago. But let's not fumble around with the years too much.

• • • •

Speaking of "The Ghost of Yankee Doodle," it might be well to point out that Sidney Howard in this work has not concentrated on preaching a great patriotic political sermon so much as he has on fabricating an unusually fine play. It is dramatic entertainment of the best sort, first; a close analysis of the temper of a possibly near future, second. In combination, these elements are thoroughly engrossing.

In HOLLYWOOD With Jimmy Fiddler

Hollywood, Nov. 16.—Personal observations: Eleanor Powell believes in greeting all of her friends with a kiss—and she has few enemies. Pat O'Brien's simplest speech is delivered as though it were a challenge to battle. Even in her happiest mood, Joan Bennett always wears a petulant expression. Keye Luke, a full-blooded Chinese, is the most Americanized foreigner in pictures. Hollywood actresses should take lessons from Louise Dresser in the art of growing old gracefully.

ELEANOR POWELL.

Someone should tell Gene Raymond that the left hand is not the one to offer when shaking hands. Phyllis Brooks' voice soars at least two octaves higher when she is excited. Most stars talk fluently—but Janet Gaynor is the poorest conversationalist I have ever known. Even in repose, Errol Flynn always manages to look alert and reckless. Warner Oland has a nervous habit of twisting the jade ring he wears on his left hand.

Irene Dunne achieves a "tailored" look that most actresses try for—and miss. Francis Lederer smiles readily—but I have never seen him really laugh. At any affair where screen celebrities are introduced, Henry Armetta always gets more applause than the greatest stars. Deanna Durbin never makes an optimistic remark without gravely knocking on wood. Odd how many stars, vacationing at Mexican resorts, register under phoney names. Maybe it is the level but Tom Brown should try to restrain his wide-eyed eagerness—it looks too much like an act. Don Ameche has an incurable habit of running his fingers through his hair.

In a studio cafe today, I overheard the conversation of a group of extras. One, a rather distinguished-looking, gray-haired man, listened while the others took turns beefing about the hardships of their lot. Finally, after one particularly woeful harangue, he spoke up, "You make me sick—the whole lot of you," he announced, flatly. "You're always so damned busy pitying yourselves that you never have time to enjoy the good things that go with your work. I used to have money. Before the crash, I paid out hundreds of dollars every year to hear grand opera at the Met. Two months ago, a studio actually paid me $110 to sit in an audience for 11 days and listen while Grace Moore, one of the greatest living sopranos, sang my favorite arias. I don't mind missing a few meals, if I can do work that pays such dividends as that."

Franciska Gaal, the beautiful Hungarian star who is playing in "The Buccaneer," was discovered in Europe by Joseph Pasternak, now a Hollywood director. Under his guidance, she made her first stage appearance in Budapest and through his advice, climbed to fame, and, eventually, a Hollywood contract. When she reported for her first day's work in "The Buccaneer," she was nervous and frightened. "I have asked Mr. Pasternak to come and wish me luck before I start," she said, "is he here?" Mr. Pasternak was not and Franciska refused to work. All day, while Cecil B. DeMille fumed and raged, she kept her eyes glued on the stage entrance and refused to go before the camera. Next morning, Pasternak arrived and she pronounced herself ready. "Thank God," snorted DeMille, "that superstition is satisfied!" Franciska bridled. "I am not superstitious," she announced, defiantly. "It is just that I will not work without Mr. Pasternak to wish me luck first!"

A letter from a college boy in this morning's mail. He asks what I consider the surest route to success in the movie industry and—after thinking it over—I've decided that there is only one possible answer. Write stories! Almost every big production executive in Hollywood today started as a scenario writer. It is amazing what respect an illiterate movie mogul can generate for any man who can write an intelligent sentence.

Mike Appeal Ends Sound Track Peril

Tourist boats were chugging about Lake Arrowhead. Whenever Clarence Brown was ready to direct a scene in "Benefits Forgot," on the village location at the lake shore, a plea was made over the loud speaker system to "Cut the motors." Usually the boaters obliged. One fisherman insisted on ignoring the plea. Finally, James Stewart got on the microphone.

"This is Jimmy Stewart speaking," he remarked. "Look, old man, I can't do my scenes until you cut the motor, and they'll keep me here, and I'll miss lunch, and I didn't have breakfast this morning. Be a sport and give me a break, won't you?"

The motor was promptly killed, and the fisherman thereafter obliged every time the request was made.

Starlets Lauded As Grid Experts

Girls like football as well as boys. During recess at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio school, Judy Garland and Suzanne Larson join Mickey Rooney, Freddie Bartholomew and Ronald Sinclair in kicking, catching and passing a football. Judy can kick a perfect spiral, and passes with the expertness of a grid veteran.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Erstwhile Ardent Admirer Now Frowns on Everything Girl Says and Does! She Asks Advice.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: We have been sweethearts for six years. There was a time when everything I did and said met with his approval. For the past few months nothing I do pleases him; everything I say vexes him. He seems to be bored with me. In fact, I am beginning to wonder whether or not he is fed-up and trying to break off. What would you do under the circumstances? Fade out of the picture? Or hang on hoping the mood will pass? I feel pretty badly over the situation and have tried desperately to change the situation, but my efforts seem only to make things worse. RHETT.

* * * *

DEAR RHETT: Perhaps you have made the mistake of submerging your personality in your relationship with this man, so that you no longer possess any clear-cut identity. Perhaps you have grown slipshod in manner of speech as well; and in addition have neglected to keep up social and intellectual pursuits of your own which would make you a continuously stimulating individual. Perhaps you have leaned on him too lazily as the be-all and end-all of your social and psychic existence.

* * * *

Or, on the other hand, the fault may be more with the man. Perhaps he insistently spoiled you, in the beginning, into believing you were altogether perfect just as you stood, and that the only thing he asked of you was to be the gracious recipient of his adulation. And now that the bloom has worn off his first fine frenzy of adoration, he may not have the intelligence to realize his discontent is largely of his own making, through having obliged you to be a static dream-image, instead of permitting the relationship to develop wholesomely on a realistic basis.

* * * *

In any event, I suggest you stop "trying desperately" to recapture his approval. Keep your poise, socially and emotionally. Hold fast to your sense of perspective. Don't tear your personality to pieces by attempting to re-fashion it along lines designed to please this sullen critic. Since everything you say and do so displeases him; since the more you try by word and action to obviate his complaints, the sharper they become, I recommend that you drop this line of defense altogether and present instead an attitude of unruffled composure. Protected by that margin of inviolable reserve, go on being the person you have always been, making only such changes in your social and emotional attitudes as your own honest analysis of yourself suggests as being in order.

* * * *

I have just been reading a book which I think would be of invaluable help to you in charting a sane, constructive course in this situation. Written by Florence Guy Seabury, it is titled "Love Is a Challenge," which title, by the way, doesn't half do justice to the meaty sociological, psychological and intellectual content of the book. It is charmingly written, stuffed with anecdotes drawn from contemporary life and chock-full of delicious borrowings from fiction, biography, autobiography, history and science. As a matter of fact, I am inclined to place this book almost at the top of a required-reading list for the person of either sex who is old enough to be thinking of love or marriage.

* * * *

By his irritable conduct and failure to give an honest and enlightening explanation for his change of attitude, this man filled you with a sense of confusion, guilt and wretched self-consciousness, all inimical to poise and charm. He is causing you to lose faith in yourself. That sense of personal unworthiness and social inadequacy is the thing you must strive to correct, rather than the man's current reaction to you, for it is relatively unimportant in the last analysis.

* * * *

To break off the relationship might be to take more drastic action, in the sense of cutting off your nose to spite your face, than the situation warrants. But on the other hand, don't "hang on" especially. Begin gradually to pick up the threads of other social contacts with persons who approve you as you are, and if the relationship is to die, let it die gradually on both sides. Perhaps diminishing doses of your society, coupled with a renewed interest in other aspects of life than association with this man, for your part, may serve automatically to bring his attention back into appreciative focus once more.

Strangers' Holiday Dinner.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Having heard that the "Strangers' Dutch-Treat Thanksgiving Dinner" was such an enjoyable affair last year and the year before, I am wondering if you can tell me through your column whether it is to be held again this year. Very truly yours, A. B.

* * * *

DEAR A. B.: In another column of this newspaper some days ago there was a brief announcement to the effect that such a dinner is to be held again this year. For details I suggest you get in touch with Dr. Grace A. Thompson, telephone DIstirct 4704, who originated the idea and has, so I understand, assumed responsibility for its perennial continuance. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain.

Some of you do not have to diet, but there is not a woman in the world who can get by without exercise. Only a firm musculature can hold the silhouette to smooth, streamlined curves. It is true that bulges may be the sign of excess weight concentrated in certain areas, but they are just as likely to indicate lazy muscles—lack of exercise.

If you want to improve your figure without losing weight, forget about dieting. What you need is exercise to take off the inches in measurements that should be reduced. Exercise is the measure that changes proportions.

Danger of Flabbiness.

If you are dieting to lose weight, however, exercise is more important than ever, for as the pounds are removed there is an increased tendency to flabbiness. Unless you exercise diligently to strengthen the muscles of your problem measurements the bulges may become more pronounced with the weight loss.

The physiological advantage of exercise is that it prevents the feeling of depression which accompanies flabbiness of the muscular system. Bodily vigor is maintained through improved muscular tonus.

Hipline Needs Specialty.

The two measurements which practically always call for special exercise are the hipline and the stomach. To slim down the hips you must reach the muscles of the hips, thighs and buttocks, which requires leg-swinging, rolling or climbing. Here is a splendid leg swinging exercise which also strengthens the tummy muscles:

Position: Standing, grip a chair-back with both hands for support. Stand about 12 inches from the chair.

Movement: Kick alternate legs backward. To be effective, the backward kick must reach an angle of 45 degrees. Swing the leg even higher if possible. Perform for 50 counts. This exercise really gets results.

If you are an overweight, you also have to diet, and here is a balanced slimming menu:

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

It is too often said that we do not know the cause of cancer, and this soon gets translated in the public mind to saying we do not know anything about the nature of cancer, or even to we do not know anything about cancer.

That is very far from the truth. The cause of cancer, in a narrow sense, we do not know about. But we can formulate some pretty good theories on the subject, and it is probable we never will get much further than we are now. But the life history and the nature of cancer we know very well.

The whole body is made up of groups of cells. As the body grows in infancy, the growth process consists simply in a multiplication of these cells. Aslo when an injury, such as a cut, occurs, the cells on each side of the cut multiply and fill in the space caused by tissue loss. The curious thing about the cells in growth and repair of wounds is that they multiply just enough and then stop. We do not know how they know how to do that—what influences them to begin multiplying, and what influences them to stop multiplying when they are through.

Sometimes a group of cells begins to multiply for no obvious reason. They do not know when to stop, so the result is a lump or tumor. The one easiest for most of us to see is a wart, which is a set of cells which have over-multiplied. These tumors may form out of any kind of tissues and are named accordingly. If one grows in fibrous tissue it is called a fibroid or a fibroma.

Cancers are malignant tumors growing in epithelial tissue. Therefore, the skin, the breast, the uterus and the stomach are the most frequent sites.

It shoulde be perfectly clear that if the physician gets a cancer while it is confined to one spot, before it gets out in the blood stream, it will be a good deal easier to cure it by complete removal. The aim of all cancer treatment, therefore, is to get the case as early as possible.

Glitter for the Cocktail Hour

BLOUSES are not bloused this winter, neither are they designed as accents to suits. The newest blouses are of glamorous materials, are worn atop the skirt and give the appearance of a frock when seen above the luncheon, cocktail or informal dinner table. The styling follows that of frocks rather than the conventional blouse. Necklines are low or high and bodices are swathed, draped or plain. Materials include molten lames, sequin-studded silk crepe, satin, velvet, brocades and lace. The smart blouse above is made of black and silver striped lame in surplice style with molded lines.

Business Woman Needs Patience and Control of Temper

Characters need as much grooming as hair, faces and figures, if a woman wants to get on in the business world, according to Frances Maule, writing in the November Independent Woman.

Miss Maule says she has heard criticisms about women not having learned to work together and with other people; that they are still prone to take things too personally, and that their reactions are still likely to be emotional rather than rational.

"Which seems to be a way of saying that women simply can't take it," is her summing up of the situation. "And being able to take it is a test of character.

"However obnoxious the boss, we have to keep right on taking orders from him. However poisonous the woman, we must keep right on sitting at the next desk to hers. And our success on our job is determined very largely by our success in taking the boss' orders gracefully and getting on comfortably with the uncongenial neighbor. When you break down and declare that you simply can't work with anybody you don't like, you confess to a lack in your business equipment as well as to a personal weakness.

Don't be a yes-woman to your boss.

Ensemble Is Extended To Girls of All Ages

Paris (U.P.).—The ensemble theme has extended to little girls of all ages with the colors and cut of the frocks and coats adapted to their years. Small children will wear pastel frocks of dainty design with coats in slightly deeper tones. For older girls, colors will be deeper and the full cut modified.

For the girl from 12 to 14, bright checked wools of tailored design are shown for school, and dark, rough wool coats have scarves and trim to match the dresses. Necklines are high and round, sleeves are short, and skirts are made with low kick pleats.

The new warm spicy brown that's captivated the town since we introduced it this season. As a smart "go-with-er" Red Mud is without a peer. Particularly effective with black! Shown here in two recently arrived styles of pin-perforated suede—with those semi-soft toes that are so very popular.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Nov. 16.

ALTHOUGH you might gather from these dispatches that I am pretty much of a night-club hound, putting on the old family rhinestones each evening and careening off to some sinful den, the truth is, I fear, that I am mostly a home-body and typewriter slave when not peering at fashion shows. But I do have my moments, even yet, and the other night I crashed into El Morocco, the famous supper-spot with the zebra benches, and one of the Big Three.

ALICE HUGHES.

Boniface John Perona had lassoed a dandy crop of "celebrities" under his palm trees of white cellophane on my night out. There they were—Gloria Swanson, Joanie Bennett, Paulette Goddard, Eleanor Ryan, Gertie Lawrence, Peggy "Deb" Stevenson and the photographers' joy, Gloria "Mimi" Baker, without whose picture a local society page is strictly unofficial. She was a fine picture, all right, with her long black bob and her elegant figger in red.

I've long since learned the great moment at these snooty night spots, whose chief selling points are "exclusiveness," "the right people" and "snob appeal." The success of the evening depends on the grand entrance. It is a masterpiece of self-conscious egotism to see one of these high-voltage beauties poised on the top step of the dining room, positively exploding glamour and waiting for the flash of the camera bulb which announces that she has arrived, in person and the shapely flesh. Everyone look and admire, please, because I have to make way for the next exhibit. I shouldn't like to live in these places, as so many do, but they are wonderful classrooms in which to study the comedie humaine—once every six months, say.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—As you know, this is anything but a gossip-chart. Yet the separation of Political Columnist Walter Lippman and his pretty blonde wife, the former Faye Albertson, is of unusual interest and moment, and calls for comment. Faye hailed from a famous farm near Newburyport, Mass.—rallying ground of all the young radical intellectuals of two decades ago, and it was there she met Lippman, wonder boy of Harvard and a passionate liberal. Well, note the picture now—Walter playing on the other team; Faye freeing herself, and what next in this colorful saga of two bright Americans?

Every now and then there is a headline baby here, and the big black type is now achieved by the son of Angier Biddle Duke (22) and his pretty wife, Priscilla St. George Duke (18). He has the Biddle name, a large slice of the Duke tobacco money—she has Tuxedo Park family and goods of her own. Gold spoon in that tiny mouth? Oh, no; solid diamond!

* * * *

I hear that Margaret Sullavan and Henry Fonda will be costarred in a new movie. No doubt the former mates will chatter exclusively of babies when not actually acting, for Maggie is now the mother of a daughter, and the present Fonda menage expects a newcomer around holiday time. Civilization certainly gets more complicated every day!

Nut Recipe Will Win $3 First Award

For girls whose men friends disapprove of their fussing with hair or using make-up in public, Perc Westmore, Hollywood make-up expert, offers the following suggestions for keeping looks intact through an entire evening:

Always use a make-up foundation.

2. Learn to use paste rouge. A good rule in applying paste rouge is to put it on sparingly at first and see that it follows the natural flush of the cheeks. Incidentally, paste rouge goes on right over the foundation, whereas cake rouge is better over powder.

3. Put the merest film of white vaseline over mascara.

4. Remove excess lipstick by pressing lips on bit of cleansing tissue, let set for a moment, then powder lips.

5. Spray brilliantine on the hair to keep it in place.

Notables' Music Class Takes Larger Quarters

Series of Ten Lectures on Appreciation to Be Given at Y. W. C. A.; Like Old-Fashioned Singing School Without the Noise.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

Mark Twain, who once announced, "At last I think I'm old enough to admit I don't like classical music," never had the opportunity now open to Capital residents. Learning to listen to a symphony and not only like it but enjoy it as a participant is the purpose of the Washington Layman's Music Course, in which a sizable section of society is interested.

HOPE R. MILLER.

A sample lesson given not long ago proved such a stimulating experiment that a number of notables who thought their school days were over, signed up for the ten lectures, which begin tomorrow evening at 8:30 o'clock.

This is not the first time Washingtonians have had a chance to study music from the listener's point of view, but it is the first time the course has been arranged and offered to anyone who may be interested. The cultural project, as it will be carried out this season, started with a select group of women who met at the home of Mrs. Edwin B. Parker, in 1935, to study with Miss Harriet D. Johnson, of New York, who still teaches the class. The following year the number increased and meetings were held at the Phillips Memorial Gallery. Last winter, an even larger group assembled each week at Junior League hedaquarters to take the course.

Now, in order to accommodate a larger audience, classes are to be held in Barker Hall at the Y. W. C. A. each Thursday evening. Working with Mrs. Parker, c airman of the committee to promote the course, are Mrs. Benjamin W. Thoron, vice chairman; Mrs. Foster Adams, Mrs. Charles Baker, Mrs. Daniel Borden, Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Mrs. David Karrick, Mrs. W. Calhoun Sterling, Mrs L. Corrin Stro..g, Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. Henry Parsons Erwin, Mrs. David St. Pierre Gaillard, Walter Nash, Clark Foreman and John Rowland Hill.

To the end of accommodating members who cannot attend every lecture, Miss Johnson has arranged to give a resume of the preceding class at each session. Works to be presented this season by Dr. Hans Kindler and the National Symphony Orchestra will be used as a basis for illustration and discussion; lantern slides, phonograph records and piano illustrations will be employed as visual and aural aids and, if you think the course as a whole is a dry study of music appreciation principles, you're all wrong. Judging from accounts of those who have had the course before, as well as of those who attended the sample lecture, the class is more fun than anything to hit town in many a moon. It's the old-fashioned singing-school idea brought up to date—except that that pupils beat time instead of sing and master the whys and wherefores of appreciating classical music as painlessly as possible.

Postcript on Achievement Award

News that Malvina Hoffman, author and sculptor, had been awarded the medal for "eminent achievement" by the American Woman's Association in New York was received with keen interest here, where Miss Hoffman has a host of friends.

A tall, aristocratic woman with silvery hair and an exceptional sense of humor, Miss Hoffman visited in Washington last year when some of her sculptures were exhibited under the aegis of the National Geographic Society. It was she, you remember, who spent five years creating a series of life-size bronzes depicting the races of man for the Field Museum in Chicago.

I recall a conversation with Miss Hoffman in which she related some of her experiences in modeling racial types on a trip around the world. She told of invading curious corners of the earth, persuading half-civilized men and women to pose and then making rough models from clay before the human models became frightened and ran away. Accompanying her on the expedition was her husban . Samuel B. Grimson, artist and scientist.

The results of those travels were a series of sculptures that made her world famous and "Heads and Tales," one of the most readable adventure books ever written by an artist.

Mrs. La Gorce Luncheon Hostess

Miss Hoffman's work was a subject talk among some of the guests yesterday at a luncheon given by Mrs. John Oliver La Gorce, wife of the vice president of the National Geographic Society and associate editor of the National Geographic Magazine.

Incidentally, entering the handsome La Gorce residen ., on Kalorama road, is like stepping onto a magic carpet. For instance, you glimpse an unusual ship model here, a huge treasure chest there, an intricately carved cabinet not far away and a sheathed sword in the niche of the beautiful marble mantlepiece—each telling a story of adventure in distant lands. The spacious, tastefully furnished drawing room was especially inviting yesterday as a few guests gathered around the open fire for glasses of sherry before going in to luncheon.

Later, at a table decorated with a centerpiece of dark red carnations and marshberries and slender-stemmed vases bearing "fountain" bouquets on either side, the company enjoyed a luncheon that was both delicious and delightful. Among the 12 guests were Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, one of e most entertaining women in Washington, and Mrs. Bruce Barton, wife of the new Representative from New York.

Reads Will Entertain For 2 Children Dec. 21

On Tuesday, December 21, Capt. Albert Cushing Read, U. S. N., and Mrs. Read will entertain at a dance for a number of friends of their sub-debutante daughter, Miss Betty Read, and their son, Cushing Read. The party will take place at their residence, 5820 Daniel road.

Women Writers Will Be Feted

Navy Secretary's Wife Will Give Tea for Two Groups.

Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, entertained at a tea yesterday afternoon, from 5 to 7, at her home on R street. She will entertain at another tea this afternoon for members of the Women's National Press Club and the Washington Newspaper Women's Club.

About the Town

With Dudley Harmon

Along with his registration card for the unemployed, the postman brought us yesterday a nice invitation from Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Darlington, jr., for a very small cocktail party on Friday afternoon, November 26. The affair will be held at their home, 2301 California street, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Elting, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Bastedo and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Cotton, jr.

DUDLEY HARMON.

The invitation reads in the prescribed manner "to meet," but all six of the honor guests will probably be known to most of those who attend. Mr. and Mrs. Elting lived here several years while the former was connected with a New Deal housing program. Joseph Cotton was also here with the N. D. for a while and he and Mrs. Cotton had a house in Georgetown. We seem to recall that Philip Bastedo occupied a residence with some other bachelors here before his marriage a year or so ago to a New Yorker.

All of them are converging on Washington for the Thanksgiving holidays. The Eltings will stay with the Darlingtons, the Bastedos with the Lucius Wilmerdings and Mr. and Mrs. Cotton will also no doubt be with friends here.

THE USUAL unbroken calm of the State Department was disturbed the other day by a fire. Just as the staff, from the Secretary to the file clerks, was reaching for their hats to go home, everybody noticed a very peculiar smell, as though, says one witness, a corpse or a hank of hair were ablaze.

"Save the archives," screamed a dignified diplomat, prepared to rush down in the cellar to rescue a handful of treaties. Others searched frantically for the fire, looking into wastebaskets and under desks.

It couldn't be found anywhere, until finally a member of the Department stumbling around in the sub-basement discovered it in the locker of one of his colleagues. How it started, nobody knows, but it was put out without further damage.

* * * *

MASSES OF PEOPLE turned up at 3327 N street yesterday for the cocktail party given by Ralph Snowden Hill, of the State Department. His home has all the charm of a Georgetown house without any of the disadvantages of age. There are two living rooms, one very long, facing the street, and the other smaller and looking out over the garden. Both are furnished with beautiful French pieces, and handsome old mirrors. Drinks and canapes were served in both rooms, which kept people from ganging around one table as they do at so many parties here.

We waved to or rubbed elbows with the following: The Belgian Ambassador and beautiful Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz, the latter in a black coat with a silver fox collar; Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt, who came with Mrs. Eldridge Jordan; Mrs. Lawrence Houghteling, in a lovely wine red frock with a matching hat; Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Exnicios and Mr. and Mrs. Morris Clark; Laura Tuckerman, whose smart black hat had a long red tassel instead of a veil; Clarence Hewes and Robert Coe; the Austrian Minister and Mme. Prochnik—the Minister, by the way, never takes a drink until 7 o'clock in the evening; Harold and Eva Hinton; Philip Broadmead, of the British Embassy; Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, busy with plans for her Monday musicales at the Mayflower; Mrs. Matthew Hanna; Lady Lewis, Enid Snow, Nancy Mann, Admiral and Mrs. Mark Bristol, Mrs. Harold Simms, in a figured blouse and plain skirt; the Norwegian Minister and Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne, and many, many more.

* * * *

MRS. MATTHEW Hanna entertained at a luncheon yesterday for Ernest Ives, consul general at Belfast, Ireland, and Mrs. Ives . . . The Military Attache of the French Embassy and Mme. Lombard had a small tea yesterday at their home on Thirty-second street . . . Capt. and Mrs. Paul Bastedo will entertain at a cocktail party tomorrow afternoon for the latter's son, Dick Griffin, and his fiancee.

Peace Is Harvest of Life, Women's City Club Told

Miss Long Says Freedom From War Is Not Gift From God or Congress, But a Result of the Way Communities and Nations Live.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Peace is not a gift from God or from Congress; it is a harvest, the result of a way of life in communities and nations, Miss Alves Long, chairman of international relations for the General Federation of Women's Clubs, told the Women's City Club yesterday afternoon. Miss Long, who spoke Monday before the club institute of the Maryland State Federation conducted in Baltimore by the State president, Mrs. Frank M. Hoadley, also will be guest of honor at the luncheon of the Chevy Chase Woman's Club today.

"I believe peace is possible," said Miss Long, "but it is something for which we must strive. We must plan our lives and the life of the Nation to preserve it and to bring it about."

Quotes From Bible.

Quoting the Bible text, "Render unto God the things which are God's and unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's," she pointed out that the last part of the quotation was seldom stressed, but nevertheless had distinct importance. It was evidence, she said, that Christ recognized the duties of citizenship and the separation of church and state. "Our conscience belongs to God," she said, "and the state has no right to restrict it, for the state exists for the people. We have inherent right to think, worship, speak and write according to the dictates of our conscience. But we have a duty of citizenship, the first of which is to vote as intelligently as we are able. Churches should consider work for good citizenship as important as work for hospitals."

"We should take citizenship seriously," declared Miss Long, and study the problems of Government at least as earnestly as we try to learn to play contract. Gladstone asserted a nation cannot have a good foreign policy unless it has a good domestic policy. If we do our duty in citizenship, our democracy will endure; if we don't, why should we expect it to?"

Advocate of World Court.

Miss Long is a zealous advocate of the World Court. "We should learn to take our international disputes to court just as we do our individual ones," she said. "We stand the chance of losing, but it is better to lose occasionally than to live in a country or in a world where jungle law prevails."

She was introduced by Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, president of the club, who entertained at a luncheon in her honor previous to her address. Other guests at the luncheon included Mrs. Roberta Campbell Lawson, president of the General Federation; Mrs. Winslow Herschel, at whose home Miss Long was a guest Monday night, and who entertained that evening at a reception in her honor; Mrs. Lloyd W. Biddle, president of the D. C. Federation; Mrs. Edgar B. Meritt, president of the Political Study Club and radio chairman of the General Federation; Mrs. W. W. Husband, Mrs. Jennie Esmond Wright, Mrs. Lloyd A. Morrison, Mrs. Edgar Kay, Mrs. Frank Mulkern, Mrs. Johann C. Kondrup, Miss Vella Winner, editor of the General Federation magazine; Mrs. Horace J. Phelps, Mrs. Clinton L. Doggett.

They attended the program of Dr. Torney Simon, presented before the music section of the Twentieth Century Club in the drawing room of the Women's City Club preceding the hour of Miss Long's address.

Wife of Writer Honored at Tea

D. C. Branch of Woman's Party Host to Mrs. Gram-Swing.

Representative Nan Wood Honeyman, of Oregon, and her niece, Miss Nan Smith, of San Francisco, were among guests at the tea given yesterday afternoon at Alva Belmont House by the District of Columbia Branch of the National Women's Party in honor of Mrs. Betty Gram-Swing. Mrs. Swing, wife of Raymond Gram-Swing, distinguished writer and radio commentator, came to Washington from her home in Connecticut last week-end to attend the meeting of the National council of the National Woman's Party, of which she is a member.

The tea was given in her honor because of her activity with the District branch when she was here several years ago as Congressional secretary during the absence of Anita Pollitzer—also among the guests yesterday. Dr. Miriam Oatman (Mrs. F. L. Blachly), president of the branch, and Mrs. Gram-Swing received together.

Alternating at the tea table in the dining room were Miss Mildred Curran, Mrs. Henry Anson Bates, jr., who is active in the Shakespeare Society and the Women's City Club, as well as the Woman's Party; Mrs. Karl Greene and Miss Myrl Rhine. Miss Pollitzer and Helen Hunt West also assisted. The table was decorated with a center bouquet of roses and elsewhere in the room were bronze chrysanthemums from the greenhouse of Mrs. Avery Coonley, long an interested member of the organization.

Miss Doris Stevens, chairman of the International Commission of Women, was among the guests, as were Mrs. C. B. Newman, Mrs. Edwina Avery, Mrs. E. A. Gladman, Miss Martha Souder, Miss Eula Lee Adams, Miss Edri Gass, Elsie Hill, Anne Carter, Clara Mandeschied, Mrs. Helen Forbes, Miss Lucille Harn and Miss Roberta Salzman.

Women's Press Club Is Host to Farley

Another of the off-the-record talks enjoyed by members of the Women's National Press Club was given by Postmaster General James A. Farley guest of honor at the luncheon in the Willard Hotel yesterday afternoon.

He told how campaigns are planned and related some of his personal experiences and observations, even explaining who his famous prediction on the results of last November's election was made. He also answered questions for the women of the press and their guests, trusting members of the newspaper "sorority" to keep any of the party or state secrets he may have divulged.

100 District Bar Women Attend Fete

Nearly 100 members of the Women's Bar Association and their guests last night attended one of its series of dinner meetings in the Hotel Continental, at which Judge Annabel Matthews, the president, presided. George M. Morris, chairman of the House of Delegates of the American Bar Association, Mrs. Morris; Henry Quinn, president of the D. C. Bar Association, Mrs. Quinn; Walter Bastian, past president, and Mrs. Bastian, were guests of honor.

Miss Mary Agnes Brown and Mrs. Grace Kanode Vickers both talked on the International Congress of Comparative Law, which they attended at The Hague last summer as representatives of the Women's Bar Association. Miss Brown mentioned the fact that six of the eight American women included in the 47 delegates from this country, headed by Dean John H. Wigmore, of Norhwestern Law School, were from Washington. Others, in addition to her and Mrs. Vickers, were Miss Ellyne Strickland, who represented the Federal Bar Association; Mrs. Ella Higman, Miss Mary Connolly and Mrs. Freda Lyman. The purpose in the comparative study of laws of the various countries is to reconcile their differences, she pointed out, and added that a committee was considering the feasibility of having an international dictionary of legal terms as a basis from which to start in this direction.

Mrs. Vickers went from The Hague to Brussels, Paris and London, and said it was "gratifying to note the courtesy and esteem for women in the profession among the men in Paris and London, with no aggravating questions with respect to the use of association libraries and membership."

Mr. Bastian explained the new system of government of the American Bar Association worked out at the Kansas City convention and Judge Ellen K. Ready gave informal highlights of the conclave.

Chinese Flee Their Capital Before Enemy

Japanese Mechanized Columns Smash Center of 'Hindenburg Line.'

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

Japan's mechanized armies smashed the center of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek's "Hindenburg Line" and cleared the way for a major drive from Shanghai to the central government capital.

Foreign embassies and other organizations were preparing to leave, if necessary to maintain contact with the central regime. More than 70 Americans prepared to flee.

It was not believed, however, that the British, American or French diplomatic establishments will be moved, as Chiang and the supreme war council remain in the city.

Sections of the government were moving to Hankow, transporting their archives on Yangtze River steamers, and others were reported going to Changsha, capital of Hunan Province, far inland.

Japanese and many foreign observers agreed that occupation of Nanking by the Japanese, which might mark virtual end of the war, seemed certain by Christmas.

Other developments in the past 24 hours included:

In north China Japan pressed her invasion of Shantung Province. Japanese armies were closing in on Tsinan-fu, the provincial capital.

It was believed that once Nanking is occupied by the Japanese plans will be perfected for organization of a new national Chinese government and that the national capital will be restored to Peking.

In Tokyo the Japanese cabinet decided to clear the way for establishment of a new imperial war headquarters in the capital under Emperor Hirmito. It was believed the new headquarters, a sort of war supergovernment dominated by the military, would be announced soon.

The Japanese Domei News Agency indicated that Tokyo might be preparing to assume temporary control of part of China's national finances to prevent a currency collapse in Shanghai and other conquered areas.

Members of the lower house of the Japanese Parliament adopted a resolution urging the government to withdraw from the nine-power pact in retaliation for the resolution adopted in Brussels condemning Japan's "aggression" in China.

A spokesman for Lieut. Gen. Iwane Matsui, Japanese commander here, said the capture of Soochow, key city to the center of the Chinese "Hindenburg line," was expected momentarily.

Warship Off to China.

London, Nov. 16 (AP).—The cruiser Birmingham, first British warship specially equipped for antiaircraft combat, was commissioned for China service today and will leave Plymouth Thursday for the Far East.

French Deputies Debate Policies of Chautemps

Paris, Nov. 16 (AP).—Parliament opened an extraordinary fall session today and the Chamber of Deputies agreed to Premier Camille Chautemps' motion to begin its work with general debate on his government's rule of the last four months. Chautemps wished indorsement of the government's policy in foreign affairs.

Arms Factories Built.

London, Nov. 16 (AP).—Sir Thomas Inskip, minister for co-ordination of defense, announced today that Britain had built 19 special munitions and aircraft factories in the last 20 months in her rearmament program. Eleven of the plants already were in production.

No Gold Basis Plan.

London, Nov. 16 (AP).—Sir John Simon, chancellor of the exchequer, gave a at "no" today in answer to a House of Commons question whether Britain, the United States and France were negotiating early return to the gold standard on the basis of reduced gold content of currencies.

Chinese Government Seat Moved Inland

Copyright by the Associated Press.

While Japanese pushed west and south, the Chinese government moves the ministries of foreign affairs and finance to Hankow (1) while other departments are to locate temporarily at Changsha (2) and Chungking (3). It was emphasized, however, that the army would defend Nanking to the last. Meanwhile Nippon's soldiers pressed toward Tsinanfu (A), while civilians fled from Shantung Province to Tsingtao (B). In the Shanghai-Nanking area (inset) Japanese forces pushed westward against the Chinese "Hindenburg line," with Soochow, Fushan and Changshu under heavy air bombardment.

Russia Accepts Plan to Confine War to Spain

By the Associated Press.

London, Nov. 16 (AP).—Soviet Russia, in an unexpected move, tonight removed a major obstacle to withdrawal of foreign volunteers from Spain.

She modified her opposition to granting belligerent rights to the warring Spanish factions and accepted a general plan approved by other nonintervention powers November 4 for removing foreign soldiers from the civil war.

At Salamanca, insurgent headquarters declared Japan would recognize Franco's regime November 25, first anniversary of the German-Japanese anti-communism treaty.

Barcelona, Spain, Nov. 16 (AP).—The British merchantman Cardium radioed an SOS today, saying she was being attacked off the Spanish coast by airplanes, but without identifying the attackers.

U.S. War Fears Are Expressed In Three Bills

LaFollette and Capper Propose Amendments; Mrs. Graves for Draft.

Fear in Congress that the United States somehow may be drawn into war found expression yesterday in three separate measures.

Senator Robert M. La Follette, Jr. (Progressive), Wisconsin, sponsored what he termed "a double-barrelled" constitutional amendment which would "give the people the right to declare foreign wars an to pass upon military dictatorship in America during any war."

Senator Arthur Capper (Republican), of Kansas, offered a similar constitutional amendment which would place the war-making power in the hands of Congress after a Presidential proclamation and a national referendum.

Draft Bills Asked.

Senator Dixie Bibbs Graves (Democrat), Alabama, sponsored a resolution asking Senate Military and Naval Affairs Committees to draw up bills providing for "the immediate draft by the Government, when war exists or is imminent, of any or all men, women, money, material and any or all other resources of the Nation for unlimited use and service, and without profit."

LaFollette's referendum plan would have the people vote on two questions: "Shall the United States declare war on———?" and "Shall the Congress be authorized to conscript men for military service overseas?" He pointed out in a statement that "the character of war has changed since the Constitution was drawn. It has become a conflict of whole nations, involving the suspension of almost every constitutional guarantee and liberty."

Would Guard Liberties.

He declared that his amendment would "act as a great bulwark to preserve liberty in the struggle of this Nation to maintain its democratic form of Government."

In a radio address last night Senator Henrik Shipstead (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota, warned against an economic boycott of any other nation, saying it constitutes "the first step to war." He compared the present foreign policy of this Government to that "which led us into war in 1917," and declared:

"The people's mind is again being prepared for war. They are being told again that they must send armies over to make somebody else be good."

Leopold Visits King George to Talk Colonies

Halifax Starts to Berlin as Belgian Is Welcomed in London.

By the Associated Press.

London, Nov. 16.—King Leopold of Belgium came to London tonight and Viscount Halifax left for Berlin, both on state visits in the interests of Europe's peace.

Leopold received a glittering state welcome when he arrived for a three-day visit by which he hopes to strengthen the friendship between his country and the British Empire.

A few hours earlier, Viscount Halifax left for Berlin to confer with Chancellor Adolf Hitler on matters of importance to British-German relations.

King George welcomed the youthful Belgian monarch at Victoria Station and took him to Buckingham Palace, where he was guest at a state banquet tonight.

Lord Halifax entrained for Berlin after a last minute conference with Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden. He and Hitler will hold "informal" conversations on colonies, chances for European security arrangements, the Rome-Berlin axis and other questions.

Informed quarters emphasized that his mission was only "exploratory," and represented no weakening of the virtual British-French alliance.

King Leopold is especially interested in Germany's colonial claims because Belgium has a mandate for Ruanda-Urundi, a densely populated section which formerly was a part of Tanganyika in German East Africa.

The Belgian ruler also needs a lasting friendship with Great Britain, France and Germany to bolster the foreign and military policy which he pronounced for Belgium 13 months ago. This policy he himself has defined as "barring war from our territory."

HARLAN MILLER Over the Coffee

Because someone tricked him into dancing a hula-hula on deck as his ship was pulling away from Honolulu during the recent junket, one Eastern Senator is a little bit nervous.

In the midst of his dance he looked up and saw three movie cameras trained on him and his dimpled partner . . . Now he's afraid his political enemies will get hold of the reel in time for the next election.

Out of the Golden West comes at last another Watchdag of the Treasury, in the person of the 6-year-old b. g., who detects traces of extravagance around her in Washington.

"Who," she demanded yesterday, "pays for all the water that jumps out of these fountains?"

Another trace of Southern langor noticeable in the Capital is that people in theaters here won't stand up to let you squeeze past to your seat; they prefer to be kicked in the shins.

Ilo Wallace, successor to Mrs. Pat Hurley as the loveliest of the Cabinet wives, tiptoed North the other day for a peek at "I'd Rather Be Right," to see just how sassy the play is toward the President.

She was so afraid she would be recognized and she sat so far back in her box that she saw only half the stage.

"—Alice couldn't scare Taft"

A refugee survivor of the first Roosevelt era, who lives in a cave on Connecticut avenue, came out of hiding the other evening long enough to assert that President Taft had as good a sense of humor as Franklin Roosevelt.

* * * *

In proof he cited a tale . . . Taft was chaperoning young Alice Roosevelt on a voyage to Asia . . . Someone rushed up to him, all in a dither.

"Alice has just jumped into the swimming tank with all her clothes on!" she exclaimed.

"Hm!" said Mr. Taft. "Lucky she had her clothes on!"

Capital Nuances: I haven't yet met in Washington a left-winger so leftish that he didn't shudder at someone else as a "dangerous radical," nor a conservative so reactionary that he didn't denounce someone else as a "dangerous tory."

In spots the Senate's reading clerk put quite a bit of expression into his reading of the President's message—but it wasn't the master's voice . . . The incident of Gen. Malin Craig's mustache illustrates the difference between the blundering inefficiency of American democracy and the sheer naked beauty of European absolutism.

In Russia, if Joe Stalin disliked a general's lip curl, he might shave it off with rifle fire, for sabotage of the razor industry.

"—to scare the Fascists"

Hitler got peeved when Charlie Chaplin popped up with an imitation of his mustache, and banned Chaplin movies.

But in this starry-eyed Republic the Secretary of War merely wrote a comic verse about the mustache in the Army and Navy Journal, and the general's mustache still edifies the ladies of the Capital.

* * * *

Why doesn't Gen. Craig show the Fascist countries that we have some iron in our souls, by ordering every American soldier to grow a mustache? And if that doesn't scare 'em, then order every American man, woman and child to grow whiskers, by cricky!

32,000,000 Cards Sent Out as Census of Workless Starts

One of the biggest statistical jobs in history got under way yesterday when 32,000,000 unemployment "report cards" were delivered to homes throughout the country. By Saturday the cards will be filled out by the Nation's jobless and mailed to their local postoffices. Then the task of tabulating the results and working out a solution for the unemployment problem will be undertaken. About 16,000,000 additional cards are available at postoffices for those who failed to receive one.

The purpose of the census, said Administrator John D. Biggers in a radio address last night, is to determine "how many are now employed and partly employed. We must know in what parts of the country they live. We must know their ages and what kind of work they can do. Most important, we must know the industries whose revival would contribute most to reemployment."

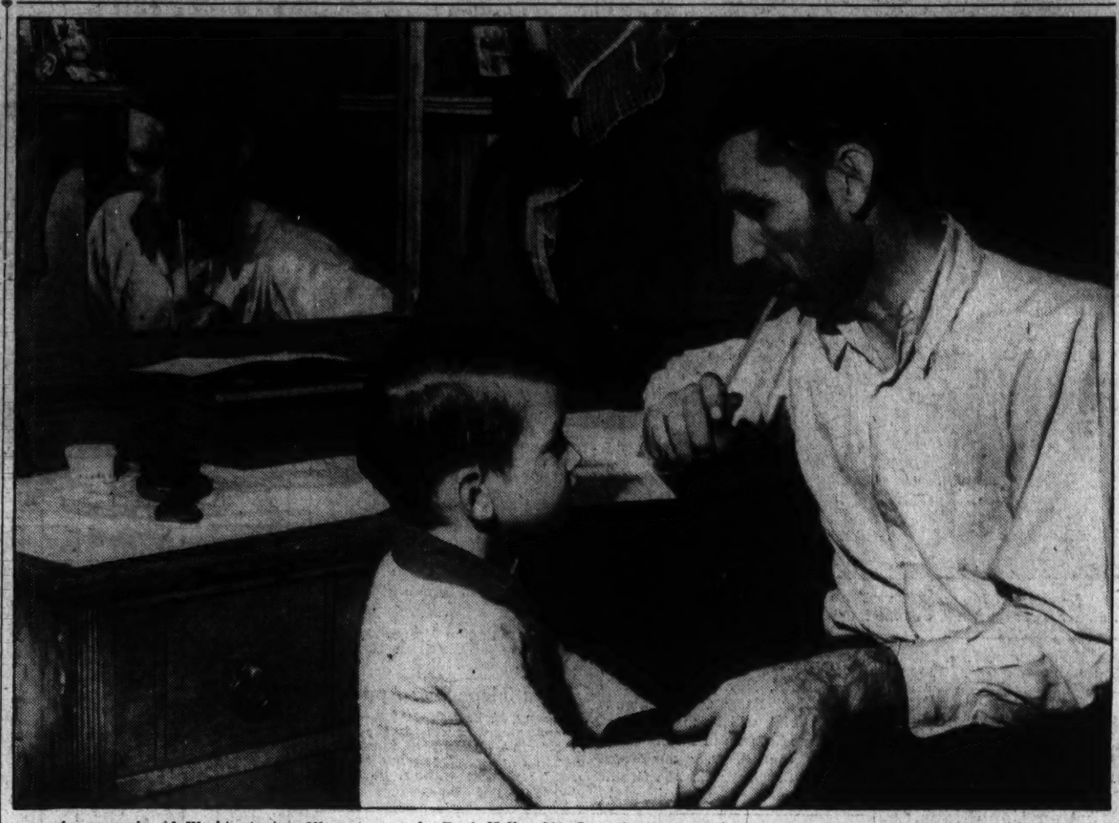
Biggers made an appeal for prompt return of the post cards, which are self-addresseo and require no postage. He asked the cooperation of employed persons in helping jobless persons fill out the cards.

Nearly 200,000 cards were distributed in the District alone. They will be assembled at the City Postoffice this week end and turned over to census headquarters. About 1,000 men and women, chosen from Civil Service lists, will start the breaking-down process in temporary office space at 1701 Kalorama road.

Biggers expects to have a report ready for Congress by March. The project, ordered by Congress in August, is being financed by a $5,000,000 WPA grant.

Even the White House received its report cards yesterday. The yellow pasteboards were placed on the butler's tray by the postman and one was taken directly to the President.

Typical of the District families who will fill out cards is that of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kelly, 510 Second street northwest. Kelly has a WPA job as a painter at Walter Reed Hospital, where he works six days a month. "I'd do anything to get a steady job," he said yesterday as he studied the questionnaire. "I can drive a truck, I'm handy with tools—all I want is $18 or $20 a week that I can be sure of."



An unemployed Washingtonian fills out a card. Fred Kelly, 510 Second street northwest (above), has a WPA job as a painter at Walter Reed Hospital six days out of each month. His son, Alfred Victor, 3, shown with him, is one of two small children.

Mrs. Kelly also will return a card. She worked in a local factory until a few weeks ago, when the plant closed down temporarily. The Kelley's finances were strained severely last March, when their daughter, Olga Margaret, was ill for nearly a month with whooping cough and pneumonia. Olga is now nearly 2 and Alfred Victor, their son, is 3.

House Group To Seek Data In Fare Boost

Resentment of Washington's organized citizens to increased Capital Transit Co. fares rumbled in a new quarter last night as a Congressional inquiry committee planned to gather information on the North American Co., giant holding company parent of the local trolley utility.

The Citizens Forum of Columbia Heights, meeting in Powell Junior High School, asked a rehearing of the entire car and bus fare problem and restoration of the office of Peoples' Council as representative of car riders before the Public Utilities Commission.

Announcement of the plan to obtain data from the North American Co. came from Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, on the eve of resumption of House subcommittee hearings on operations of the transit company.

Dirksen also said he had arranged to confer with the utilities commission tomorrow on the recent fare increase order. He promised a fair deal for all concerned.

Dirksen is the author of a bill which would fix the maximum street car and bus fare at 7 cents.

Columbia Unit Elects.

Elimination of control exercised by the Bureau of the Budget over District appropriations was urged in a resolution adopted last night by the Citizens' Forum of Columbia Heights at a meeting in Powell Junior High School.

Also reiterated was the forum's objection to the proposed transfer of the old Tuberculosis Hospital Building to Gallinger Hospital, insisting that the edifice be used for educational or recreational purposes, preferably a girls' vocational school.

Dr. Lyman F. Kebler was elected to a second term as president of the organization and Sparrel A. Wood was re-elected treasurer. Other officers elected were Lester T. Walter and Mrs. C. J. Fernald, vice presidents; Kennedy C. Watkins, secretary, and the Rev. Dr. A. P. Wilson, chaplain. Burd W. Payne and Alba M. Edwards were re-elected delegates to the Fderation of Citizens Association.

Club Plan Indorsed.

The Southeast Council of Citizens Associations, meeting last night at Eleventh Precinct Station in Anacostia, indorsed the movement of the Motor Club of Washington for driving training in secondary schools. The council also adopted a resolution asking that the proposed Marconi Memorial be erected somewhere in the Southeast section of the District.

Reform School Move Outside District Urged

Removal of the Industrial Home School from its present location on Wisconsin avenue to District-owned property at Muirkirk, Md., was recommended yesterday to the Board of Public Welfare by Earle W. Cassie, superintendent of the institution in his annual report.

"During the past ten years," Cassie said, "the population at our institution has increased nearly one-third, but no new buildings have been constructed in the past 30 years.

"It would be difficult to find room on our present site for new construction and I am convinced also that it is unwise and uneconomical to spend large sums of money in remodeling and adding to an old institution."

Rapid development of the District in the last few years indicates that larger areas of land within the District should not be devoted to institutional purposes, he added.

The site at Muirkirk now is in use as regional headquarters for the CCC in Maryland. Several years ago Congress authorized the District Commissioners to sell present property of the Industrial Home School.

"Many of our District institutions have been sadly neglected," Cassie said. "Year after year requests for immediate improvement have been shelved. This is a situation which cannot go on forever.

"It is significant that only 13 years ago the District had no institution for the care of the feeble-minded, and that four years ago we had no provisions for the care of tubercular children. The public must remember that it cannot escape the expenditure of funds for the care of delinquent children by failing to provide adequate juvenile facilities."

Men Must Train for Peace As Well as War, Baptists Told

Lynchburg Clergyman Declares Just as Effective Tools Exist for Averting Conflicts as There Are for Fostering Battles.

Men need to be trained and disciplined for peace as they are now being trained and disciplined for war, Dr. George D. Heaton, of Lynchburg, Va., declared in an address last night in Calvary Baptist Church, Eighth and H streets northwest. He spoke before a joint session of the District of Columbia Baptist Convention and the Columbia Federation of Baptist Young People's Unions.

Pointing out that a considerable part of modern warfare is concerned with the destruction of morale "by the wholesale slaughter of defenseless people," Dr. Heaton went on:

"Young men are trained to fly over schools to drop bombs upon children in their classes. Young artisans of war are trained to spray with machinegun fire frightened civilians running to cover from a bombing attack."

Nevertheless, he assured his audience that "just as effective tools exist for the making of peace as for the making of war."

Louis Lucas, Maurice Crawford, Florence Bailey, Ruth Stuart, Nellie Fike and Louis Lucas participated in a dramatic representation of the union's activities symbolically illustrated in lantern slides.

Four pastors of the District, the Rev. M. C. Smith, the Rev. Franz G. Borbe, the Rev. E. C. Tull and the Rev. A. Lincoln Smith were formally introduced to the convention, as were various new officials of the Columbia Council of Baptist Men and of the Sunday School Association.

The Woman's Baptist Missionary Union of the District of Columbia will meet this morning in Bethany Baptist Church, Rhode Island avenue and Second street northwest. Miss Florence Tencate, a missionary to Indian, will speak. At an afternoon session in the same church, the Rev. I. V. Neprash, of Philadelphia, will speak on "The Baptist Crisis in Russia," and a report on the sufferings of missionaries in Russia, China, Spain and Rumania will be read.

At the concluding session in Calvary Church, at 7 o'clock tonight, Dr. E. H. Pruden will speak on the question: "Shall We Withdraw From the Orient?" There also will be an address by Dr. J. C. Robbins, of New York, foreign secretary for Burma and Indian.

Numbers GangWar Blamed by Police For Second Death

Warring Washington numbers factions were blamed by police last night for the murder of James E. Allen, 40, colored, 1324 New Jersey avenue, who was found shot to death yesterday on the Gaithersburg-Laytonsville road near Smith's Corner in Montgomery County, Md.

Discovery of the murder followed by a month the indictment by a Prince Georges County grand jury at Upper Marlboro, Md., of Fred Schinman, 39, of the 1300 block of M street northwest, and Frank Guy, 32, colored, of the first block of G street northwest, in the "numbers racket" slaying of Samuel Jeffrees, colored, of Camp Springs, Md., two weeks earlier.

Montgomery County police said last night they were investigating the possibility that the slaying of Allen may have been retribution for the Jeffrees killing.

Women to Join Sanico Clerks In Picket Line

The League of Women Shoppers yesterday threw its strength behind 1,300 striking employes of the Sanitary Grocery Stores Co. and announced it will participate in picketing of "certain strategic stores."

Picketing by league members will begin at 11 a. m. today in front of a store at 1647 Connecticut avenue northwest, where the women will distribute leaflets stating they consider demands of the strikers reasonable and just.

Action of the league followed a report by an investigating committee which had conferred with union representatives and the management of the stores.

Meanwhile R. M. Coulter, general organizer for the Retail Clerks Union, claimed that deliveries of bread, milk and produce to Sanitary stores in the city had been completely halted through co-operation of sympathetic unions whose members refused to pass through picket lines.

A cordon of pickets working in two-hour shifts of 50 men each was maintained day and night outside the Sanico Bakery, Eckington place and R street. Yesterday 40 truck drivers refused to pass the pickets. According to Coulter picket lines also were respected by organized bakers, bakery salesmen and painters.

Beaverbrook Here, Inveighs Against War

They want peace. They want to spend their energies building. There is not a country in the Old World in which the man in the street would welcome conflict.

So believes Lord Beaverbrook, publisher of the London Daily and Sunday Express and the Evening Standard and Pall Mall Gazette and Globe, newspapers which reach more than 5,000,000 English readers.

"War, if it comes, is a long way off," asserted the ruddy, Canadian-born publisher at the Mayflower Hotel last night. Lord Beaverbrook arrived here yesterday on a tour of America, which will terminate when he leaves Florida for Jamaica and a rest.

As for the Duke and Duchess of Windsor:

"It is the eternal question. Everyone asks about it," he chuckled, but did not answer.

The country of the future, and the present, too, where the pulse of the world beats strongest, is the United States, said Lord Beaverbrook.

Notables Seen At Shoreham's New Blue Room

Celebrities Applaud Show Heartily; Encores Are Given.

By Chanticleer

Short stops around the town after dark: True to predictions, the Shoreham's new Blue Room has proved of interest to many of Washington's adopted citizens who are just back for the special session. Ringside tables were dotted with celebrities who never before had seen the Shoreham's new dinner and supper room, it having been completed since the regular session adjourned last summer.

Rosita and Fontana were called back again and again and Henri Therrien took encore after encore. Therrien does everything from the popular to operatic.

Asks Material Aid for School Soon to Mark 50th Birthday.

In a letter to all the cardinals in the United States, Pope Pius made a plea that Catholic University be "relieved of the burden of material anxiety."

The letter was made public at the university yesterday.

His holiness lauded the accomplishments of the university, in taking note of the approach of the fiftieth anniversary of its founding, which is to be observed in 1939. He emphasized the necessity of even broader achievements in the future, and committed to the Episcopate of the United States "the realization of the high hopes we cherish for the worthy completion of this worthy work.

"In order to hold the dominant position which already has been achieved as the national center of Christian culture," stated his holiness, "it is necessary for the university not only to maintain the ground gained during this half century, but also to expand the services of its several faculties to meet the new and urgent demands which are being made. Such a program, of course, can not be actuated without the material resources proportioned to the magnitude of the work.

"It is for this reason that it has seemed fitting to speak to you, our beloved sons and venerable brethren, under whose fostering the present lofty position of the university has been attained, of the pressing need of insuring for the future that measure of permanent support which will be required for the completion of that glorious undertaking.

"To that end," continued his holiness, "we recommend to you that, in the two years preceding the golden jubilee of our university and yours, plans be concerted and realized in your respective dioceses to give to the claims of the university priority over all appeals other than those of established tradition or of strict necessity. Only in this way will it be possible to lay the firm and enduring foundation which is indispensable if the university is to be equal to the tasks which have been set it."

To Whom It May Concern:

Washington's Redskins took two beatings in Pittsburgh Saturday . . . one from the Pirates and one from Owner George Preston Marshall . . . Marshall stormed into the dressing room after the game and scorched the ears of his football players . . . calling 'em quitters, among other things . . . he blamed their defeat on too much heart interest on his club . . . and threatened to ban all wives from accompanying his players to future games . . . a half dozen of the Redskins squired their ever-loving mates to Pittsburgh and the Redskins' headquarters looked like a sorority soiree . . . Napping Washington fans will be sitting behind the end zones at the Redskins-Green Bay game here November 28 . . . unless they buy seats this week . . . out-of-town fans are copping the choicest ducats.

For the first time in 14 years, the Washington sports writers are without a sports writers golf tournament . . . the annual Cleland Cup tournament at the Army War College has been abandoned . . . because the United States Army cannot see its way clear to footing the $50 outlay the tournament required . . . and besides, somebody's slice broke a window in one of the War College buildings last season . . . in the same house in which Mrs. Surratt was hanged in July, 1865, for her part in the assassination of President Lincoln . . . the Cleland Cup tournament was always unique in one respect . . . the chairman of the handicap committee was always the pretournament favorite.

If perchance, Stanford upsets California Saturday and qualifies as the West's Rose Bowl selection, there will have to be some hasty revision of Stanford's schedule . . . the Indians already have a game for New Year's Day against the University of Hawaii at Hawaii . . . but if Stanford is chosen for the bowl game it will doubtless regretfully inform Hawaii that the date cannot be kept . . . because Stanford's share of the Rose Bowl game would be approximately $85,000 . . . which ain't hay.

Frosh Said to Have Tired of Michigan; Brother at Tulane.

By the Associated Press.

Ann Arbor, Mich, Nov. 16. Athletic officials at the University of Michigan withheld comment tonight on a report that an attempt had been made to lure a freshman football star to another school.

Prof. Ralph W. Aigler, chairman of the board in control of athletics at the Western Conference school, said he did not know when the board would be ready to announce its findings in an investigation, revealed last week, of allegations of subsidization of freshmen football players by alumni groups.

Neither he nor other athletic officials commented on a copyright story in the Michigan Daily, student newspaper, that Tom Harmon, freshman halfback from Gary, Ind., had been invited to Tulane University.

Daily Has Telegram.

"Your help at simon pure school will always be subject to criticism. Our offer still stands. You can still enter this semester."

Bevan, at New Orleans, said "the only offer ever made to him was that of an athletic scholarship, which is perfectly legal in the Southeastern Conference."

"We tried to get the boy this past summer," Bevan added, "and we had heard that he planned to transfer of his own volition to another school. We naturally would have liked to have him and, since his brother is in school here, I thought he might want to transfer to Tulane if he were leaving Michigan."

Harmon Favors Michigan.

The Michigan Daily's story said Harmon intended to remain at Michigan because his high school coach, Douglas Kerr, is an alumnus.

The Daily asserted also that the subsidization investigation was "forced" with the intention of removing Harry G. Kipke as head football coach. The paper said the offer to Harmon was a direct result of the inquiry.

Four Catholic U. Stars to Return For Turkey Game

Catholic University's gridmen are beginning to see the silver lining in the cloud of gloom hanging over their heads the past 10 days, for it was learned yesterday that four men who have been out with injuries will be ready for the South Carolina fray Thanksgiving Day morning.

"Irish" Carroll, Catholic's five-star ball carrier, heads the list, followed by Carmon Pirro, giant tackle, and Sully Greco, reserve fullback, who has been out since the La Salle game with an injured shoulder. Francis Selgrade, sophomore end who was obliged to forego football because of a throat infection, also is back in harness.

Pirro, who has played some at fullback, may be shifted to end if an emergency arises, for the Cards have been short on wingmen this season.

S. E. Community Teams in 3 Games

Three games will be played tonight in the Southeast Community Center Basketball League at Hine Junior High School. The first, at 7:15, Miller Furniture Co. (formerly Clark's Service Station) vs. Procurement, Treasury Department; 8:15, National Savings and Trust Co. vs. Trojans, and 9:15, Bureau of Investigation vs. Marvin Methodists. The "G" men staged an upset in the opening game Monday night by trimming Merrick Boys Club, last year's championship team, in a thrilling contest.

Penn's Line Heavy.

Penn's line is finishing the season this year as one of the heaviest in the country. November changes brought the average up to 202 pounds per man.

SPEITH, EASTERN HIGH'S FULLBACK, DODGES A COUPLE OF WESTERN'S TACKLERS FOR A GOOD GAIN.

Harry Cooper, Lawson Little Pace Mid-South Golf Field

Pinehurst, N. C., Nov. 16. (AP).—Harry Cooper and Lawson Little fashioned a best ball 33-30—63, today to register a one-stroke advantage at the halfway mark in the 36-hole pro-pro mid-South golf tournament.

Two teams tied with 66's for fourth and fifth places were Harold Calloway, of Pinehurst, and Joe Exar, of Texas, and the Chicago pair of Dick Metz and Frank Walsh.

Twenty-two pairs on the field of 46 teams had scores under 70, including Tommy Armour and Bobby Cruickshank and Victor Ghezzi and Billy Burke with 67's.

Mildred Babe Didrikson, who arrived last night after an all-day automobile drive from New York, teamed with Ed Oliver, of Wilmington Del., for a 32—36—68. She helped out with a birdie 4 on the fifth and contributed a deuce at the seventeenth.

Washington's entries were none too successful. Leo Walper, Middle Atlantic P. G. A. champion from Bethesda, Md., teamed with Tony Penna, of Chicago, to shoot

40-Year Aim Is Realized By Winners

By Jack Munhall.

Eastern's eleven now officially is the undisputed inter-high school football champion for the first time in 40 years. For yesterday the Lincoln Parkers won the title, generally conceded them since the victory over Tech last week, by defeating Western, 14 to 6, in Western Stadium.

Two thousand students were witnesses as Eastern gained the coveted honor which has eluded it since 1897. But the victory had a slightly ironic tinge for one young man who sat fidgeting on the Eastern bench, dressed in civilian clothes. He was Al Kidwell, captain and star halfback, who more than any other player put Eastern in position to win the title.

Kidwell tore several leg muscles last Tuesday in the Tech game, but until yesterday he was expected to be in the starting line-up.

However, another boy rose to heights in leading Eastern to its triumph. Fullback Speith, a track man, resembled the anchor member on a relay team as he ripped around Western's ends for huge gains all afternoon.

Speith Is Hero.

Speith, who attracted more than passing attention for the first time in the Tech game, was a real ball-carrier yesterday. It was his end sweeps that led to Eastern's first touchdown in the early minutes of the opening period. After Paul O'Brien returned the kick-off to Eastern's 45, Speith, in two speedy jaunts, first around right end and then around left, covered 33 yards to produce two first downs and give the visitors the ball on Western's 32. There Speith took time out to recuperate and Quarterback Bill Kemp and O'Brien shouldered the burden until the ball rested on the 9.

Speith returned to action in a big way—a touchdown way. He skipped around left behind good blocking to score standing up. Hal Dickinson, a tackle, converted.

In the second quarter, Eastern rallied in sudden fashion. A previously successful Western pass play gained for Eastern. Bob York, alert Lincoln Park guard, potted this play and dashed in front of Stanton to intercept an aerial thrown by Dick Lynham on the western 33 and race to the second touchdown. York completely surprised Western and there was only one defender near him. But five teammates who escorted him goalward shouldered the Western player from York's path.

Second Try Works.

On the first conversion attempt, Dickinson missed his placement effort, but Western was offside and the play recalled. On the second try, Kemp, who was holding the ball for Dickinson, made as if to let Dickinson boot it, but arose to shoot a pass to Dick Wade, who was in the end zone.

Western, its running attack thwarted by Eastern's line, capitalized on a break to score in the third period. Morris Snead, quarterback, punted to O'Brien, who fumbled on the Eastern 28. In the ensuing wild scramble for the ball, Carroll Price,

Colleges Ask Control Of Olympic Athletes

By Bob Garrison.

With the future of the United States' Olympic Games policy hanging in the balance as well as the all-important election of officers, American Olympic Association delegates converged on Washington last night in anticipation of their quadrennial meeting scheduled for today.

Expecting a fiery session to ensue when they convene at the Chamber of Commerce at 10 a. m., members of the National Collegiate Athletic Association quickly banded together in an effort to muster their full strength to force through their plan of revised control of Olympic track and field, wrestling and swimming activity.

Avery Brundage, Princeton man, who has been president of the association for the past four years, is believed to be in line for re-election. His satisfactory handling of affairs at the 1936 Berlin games, at which time his actions were approved by the N. C. A. A., was pointed to as grounds for drafting him into office, should he not seek re-election.

Led by Maj. John Griffith, athletic commissioner the Western (Big Ten) Conference, N. C. A. A. delegates viewed this as the opportunity to make changes in the three games committees and thereby gain control over college athletes competing. Coming quick on the heels of the A. A. U.'s annual meeting in Boston at which time the collegiates made clear their desire, this meeting is expected to see control of athletes participating in the three games put under the control of colleges. But the A. A. U. delegates, it is expected, will not let the issue pass without pressing their announced intention of altering the membership of the executive committee.

Whereas the N. C. A. A. wants the present membership of 13 delegates on each of the three mentioned committees changed to nine, of which five would be college delegates, the A. A. U. is seeking an increase in its number of delegates on the executive committee from the peresent number, three, to eleven.

Meanwhile, a joint committee, composed of nine members of the A. A. U. and an equal number of N. C. A. A. members met last night behind closed doors, preparing a report to be presented to the meeting at large today.

Heretofore the A. A. U. has had the controlling votes in the Olympic groups in charge of track and field, swimming, wrestling and eight-oared rowing, among some 30 Olympic gamts. Recently Griffith nd his colleagues began the campaign to gain the majority of seats on these committees for the colleges.

The A. A. U.'s counter proposal is seen as grounds for compromise. Should the A. A. U.'s number of delegates be increased as asked, it would still have final say in the direction of the three games, it was pointed out by authoritatively informed sources.

O'Hara Answers Federal Charges With 'Not Guilty'

Providence, R. I., Nov. 16 (AP).—Walter E. O'Hara, head of the Narragansett Racing Association, Inc., today pleaded innocent for himself and the corporation to Federal grand jury indictments charging violation of the Federal corrupt practices act.

O'Hara and the association were indicted last week by a grand jury which reported the track paid "close to $100,000 of its funds within a single year" to committees and persons identified with politics.

The track executive, indicted on four counts, was released in $2,000 bail, furnished by Vernon C. Norton, reporter on the Providence Star Tribune, of which O'Hara is publisher.

'Tip' O'Neill Is Dead; Was Baseball Pioneer

Chicago, Nov. 16.—Death took another of the few remaining pioneers of baseball today—Norris L. "Tip" O'Neill, 70 years old.

The famous character, associated with the Chicago White Sox for 40 years, died in a hospital of a heart ailment after a brief illness. He was a devoted friend of the late Charles A. Comiskey, owner of the White Sox, and helped him pioneer the game.

O'Neill was known wherever the sport was played. He was a gabby, witty Irishman, with a gracious smile and natty attire, always ready to talk baseball as long as anybody would listen. He saw great stars of the American League come and go, and was Comiskey's most sympathetic counselor when the "Old Roman," brokenhearted over the famous White Sox scandal of the 1919 worlds series, wrecked his team to cleanse it.

Nobody was closer to Comiskey than O'Neill, who started his baseball career a half century ago as a minor league catcher. He was Comiskey's personal representative when the White Sox and the New York Giants, then under the leadership of the late John J. McGraw, made a world tour in 1913. He served as a personal scout for Comiskey digging up players who later became stars of the White Sox.

O'Neill, because of his devotion to Comiskey, always made his headquarters at the White Sox park, even when he served as president of the Western League for 11 years. He finally gave up the presidency of that circuit rather than live within league territory, as the magnates had defiantly decided. At his office in the White Sox park he received a letter one day in 1914, and promptly headed for Des Moines, Iowa, where one of the franchises was located.

Arriving, he breakfasted, shaved and then strolled into the city hall, where he rounded up the mayor, chief of police and a few aldermen and took them on a walk to the corner of Seventh and Locust street. There "Tip" pointed to a mail box.

"I want you to bear witness, gentlemen, that I, as president of the Western League, am establishing my offices in this mail box," he said. "But I shall live in Chicago, or any other place I damn please. I have no desire to live in the league."

He soon became former President O'Neill.

O'Neill was extremely reticent concerning his personal affairs. He kept his business to himself. However, he is reputed to have died wealthy, having invested earlier in his life in Pennsylvania oil stocks which paid big dividends.

He will be buried in Paterson, N. J., his former home.

'Football Players Are Made, Not Born!' Says Scribe Larry Kelley

By Larry Kelley.

Football players are made, not born!

Of course, some boys have more of an instinct for the game than others, but I have never yet heard of a gridiron great who achieved his greatness without hard work and plenty of it.

Football is essentially a mechanical game. Offense and defense are mapped with mathematical precision. When everything goes as outlined on the blackboard and all assignments are carried out, it figures to be six points for your side. Every offensive gesture is a potential touchdown play.

But plays on the field don't always work as they do on the blackboard. A fumbled pass, a missed block, a sloppy tackle, a player in the right place at the wrong time—any one of these things may mean a touchdown for the other fellows.

Mechanical as it is, the big element on the football field is still the human element. Opposing players don't always do what they are supposed to. The most deceptive play can fail if, for example, a defensive end instead of charging in, as he should, stays back and stumbles into the ball carrier. Or if good defensive play calls for him to stay back, the foolish end can spoil another play by charging in where angels fear to tread.

It is this habit of doing the unexpected that wins the headlines. Far be it from me to say that it's good football, but sometimes it's very effective. I got into a lot of plays I had no business to be in by not performing as the book and doctor ordered. On the other hand, a number of nice gains were made around my position while I was galloping in the wrong direction. But let's not go into that.

Last week I said that I would name an alternate backfield for my "All I've Played Against" team, said backfield to be named for more than mere football ability. Here with I submit same, four fine players who carved out illustrious careers for themselves and all four of whom made mistakes that lost ball games for their teams.

For quarterback of this illustrious backfield I give you Kats Kadlic, of Princeton. Kadlic was one of the best backs in recent Nassau history, yet it was largely his fault that Yale registered the biggest upset of the 1934 season by downing undefeated, untied Princeton, 7 to 0, in a game that the Tigers entered 6-to-1 favorites, with no takers.

* * * *

Late in the first quarter, Jerry Roscoe fed me a deep down-the-alley pass that I managed to snag for a touchdown. We promptly converted and had a 7-to-0 lead, a lead that we managed to hold for the rest of the game, despite the fact that we should have been beaten by several touchdowns.

The inspired tackling of Bob Train and the angled kicking of Stan Fuller kept us in the ball game, but Kadlic's faulty judgment was the big reason why we won. He became flustered after that early score and didn't mix up his offense. Then, with a first down on Yale's 4-yard line, he sent Constable crashing into the middle four times in a row against an 11-man line!

* * * *

For left halfback, I nominate Jack White, who is still playing a lot of fine football for the Tiger. In last year's 26-to-23 madhouse, it was White who helped me score the touchdown that sent us into the lead for the first time. I had snagged a long pass from Clint Frank and had to get past White to score. That young man obligingly came up to me and led with his chin. Being Irish, I know of only one thing to do when a man leads with his chin. I did it, and White hit the ground, while I went over for the score.

* * * *

My other halfback is Tom Bilodeau, of Harvard. It was Tom who presented us with our first score in last year's Harvard game, a very important score when you realize it ended, 14-13. I went out for a pass, but ran too far before I cut. When I turned around I saw that the ball would fall some 5 yards short. But Bilodeau, covering me, jumped into the ozone like the gentleman he is and deflected that ball right into my surprised arms. I regret that I did not think to thank him at the time. I do so now.

* * * *

The fourth member of my backfield is Snead Schmidt, Navy's hard-running power plant. It was Schmidt who made the fumble that led to our winning touchdown last fall against the Navy. I happened to be among those chasing it and it was my foot that happened to kick it to the 3-yard line, where I fell on it.

Here, then, are four fine football players, but all four of them made damaging errors while playing against Yale. How many more errors they made during their careers I have no way of knowing.

Happenings like these make me laugh when I read about "perfect" football players who were born with the goal post in one hand and a touchdown in the other. There are no "perfect" players. There has never been one and I doubt very much that there will ever be one.

Football players are made, not born! The harder they work, the better they get. But they never get perfect.

Post Notes on HUNTING

By Bill Ackerman.

In the three Virginia counties of Clark, Lowden and Frederick, there is only a part time shooting season for quail and rabbits, due to the small amount of seed stock left last year, and the resulting shortage this year. Hunting will be allowed only on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays —with a limit of seven quail, which goes for Shenandoah County as well, but with no curtailment in the shooting days

ACKERMAN.

First on the program was the dinner, which had every known dish the Old Dominion is famous for—barbecued young pig, ham, roast goose and turkey—and how the hunters removed the viands from the heavily laden tables to their own frames, until there was great wonder that they were able to follow the dogs when they got under way at 9:30 p. m.

Mr. Coon was treed only 2 miles from the start at about midnight, and with the blood lust satisfied the rest of the night was spent by those who could take it (those that could not tried to sleep) in fun and song, until breakfast at 8.

The skunk committee failed to function. Their duties were to allow no hunters to catch one without aid of the dogs, and in case of accident to remove all unpleasant odors, but for their lack, other committees made up threefold—the off-color story section in the entertainment; the bringing-in crew, for those that found it necessary to go to sleep by some mountain stream —and the wood carriers, to bring it in and carry out the ashes, and last and most important, the "gentleman of the bar."

Releases from the conservation departments of every State and hunting journals all over the country are carrying the time-worn but vitally necessary list of "don'ts" for the hunter with a gun. It seems unnecessary to repeat them here, for every nimrod should know them well; if he doesn't, he has no right in the woods.

A new one, of but few years' standing and disregarded by many —Don't shoot within range of CCC projects—is pointed out, because these boys that are working in the woods to further your sport should not be subjected to chance or carelessly fired bullets. In many States there are regulations which prohibit this; in others only cautioning notices.

In spite of the yearly increased numbers of hunters, firearm fatalities in the United States decreased from 3,120 in 1930 to 2,854 in 1935, according to a report of the American Wildlife Institute. The biggest decrease occurred during the hunting months of October, November and December, indicating sportsmen as a whole are heeding the "don'ts" and becoming more careful.

A sportsman always respects the rights of others. All hunters should, particularly those of the farmer whose land is being hunted over. He can post it if he desires, and probably will if the precepts of an author in his story in a current magazine are followed—to kill every cat you see in the woods.

Granted that most cats do get a game bird here and there, but still they are just as much his property as the land you hunt over and should be considered as such, for after all they are his only protection against rats and mice in the corncrib and hennery.

Next time you set forth with dog and gun ask the farmer to hunt his fields, and after you have received permission, as you generally will, don't knock a rail off a fence or open a gate, without replacing the one and closing the other; and when you are leaving with a brace or so of fine, fat birds—have you ever tried thanking him for your sport, not only in words, but with a bird or a bunny?

The West Virginia Conservation Commission recently paid a $3.50 bounty on the scalp of a full-grown female lynx, that although thin in flesh, so in fine fighting trim, was taken in a hand-to-hand struggle in the cabin of three hunters, which it had entered in search of food.

Moundsville, W. Va., papers report something new in hunting enthusiasm: Principal T. D. Lamb, of Cameron High School, agreed to excuse any boy who wanted to go hunting on the first day of the squirrel season, if he first obtained a license and the permission of his parents to do so.

Looks as though the time-honored excuses, such as "sick" and the alternative of "playing hookey" will henceforth be unnecessary.

★ ★ ★ ★

R. M. Ray, of Mabie, Randolph County, bagged his wild turkey early, slung it over his shoulder and started homeward. Instead, he went to a hospital, where attendants picked several shot out of his back from a shotgun charge fired by another hunter.

American Wildlife asks the hunter to remember it is not necessary for any hunter to take the "limit." Instead, shoot only what you can use; never shoot-out an area. Leave some for seed stock.

Remember one of our first conservation laws—recorded about 650 B. C. by the lawgivers of Israel and found in the Bible, chapter 22, verse 6, Deuteronomy:

"If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way of any tree, or on the ground, whether they be young ones, or eggs, and the dam sitting upon the young or upon the eggs, thou shalt not take the dam with the young."

Great Haste Pays $82.60 To Top Day

Nipponese Brings Backers $71.40 to Complete Upset of Form.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent

Bowie, Nov. 16. — Buck Langhorne, a former $1,500 plater, made the most of his light weight assignment to defeat four others in the Monticello Handicap, today's Prince Georges County feature race. Running in the blue colors of Mrs. Kenneth N. Gilpin, Virginia Sportswoman, the gelded son of Dublin finished two and a half lengths ahead of Merry Maker, with Headin' Home third. Jean Bart and Tempestuous, heavily played, brought up the rear.

Buck Langhorne, always formidable over this track, was popular with the long-shot betters in the crowd of 8,000 and returned a $17.90 mutuel. His time of 1:49 2-5 for the mile and a sixteenth was creditable over the good track.

Two other long shots rewarded their backers with handsome odds. Tempestuous, the favorite, was first to show in front and bumped Headin' Home as the vest-pocket field neared the backstretch. Buck Langhorne was third, with Merry Maker fourth and Jean Bart last. Going to the far turn, Headin' Home and Tempestuous fought a keen battle for the lead, but Lou Machado, on Buck Langhorne, kept steadying his mount along.

Tempestuous Quits.

Tempestuous began to quit entering the stretch and Buck Langhorn, under a drive, went to the front. Headin' Home also slowed and Merry Maker, coming around the outside of the field, took up the chase. Machado kept the winner to a hard drive to the wire.

Jean Bart was the only horse in the race that failed to make some sort of a bid.

A. S. Hewitt's War Scare proved the easiest kind of a winner in the first race. Under the guidance of Jockey Joe O'Malley, the Happy Argo colt jogged to the finish line three lengths in advance of Unselfish, a paddock tip. Third money went to Telling Them in a photo finish with Brilliant Blue. War Scare paid $6.20.

Anne G., a sprinter, was tried in a distance race and made good with much speed to spare in the day's second event. Under heavy restraint by Jockey Jackie Westrope, the St. James filly led Zembla to the wire by two and a half lengths. Early Broom was third in the limit field of 12. Anne G. was steadied along and took the lead when asked, bringing the favorite players $5.90.

Paying a $12 mutuel, D. MacVean's Sea Gull flew home three parts of a length ahead of Peppery in the third race. The Rock Man filly worked her way to contention on the outside, took command and under Jockey A. Cubitt's hard riding, held the driving Peppery safe. Felwyn, the third horse, might have been best. The mare had a world of bad racing luck and came from last position after going around every horse.

Great Haste Surprises.

Great Haste, owned and trained by H. J. Bundscho, sprang a surprise by winning the fourth race, a 6-furlong sprint. The son of Haste brought an $82.60 payoff to a selected few and finished two and a half lengths in advance of Over Yonder, with Knowing third. Grand Slam was the big disappointment of the race, making a mild bid leaving the backstretch and finishing in ninth position after being heavily played.

★ ★ ★ ★

California will be the scene of a whirlwind race for the leading money winner of the year. Mrs. Ethel V. Mars, owner of the Milky Way Stable, leads C. S. Howard by approximately $3,000. It would appear that Howard may get away to a fast start on the Chicago sportswoman as he will race a few horses at the Tanforan track before the Milky Way Farms gets into action. The Milky Way Farms has earned $208,125, while C. S. Howard has gathered $205,634. Mrs. Mars has her stable at the farm at Pulaski, Tenn., but will ship the horses to Santa Anita November 25 in time for the opening there.

★ ★ ★ ★

Johnny Longden is the riding star at Bowie. The Wheatley Stable rider has scored on six winners, all at good prices. Longden has things pretty much his own way. Wright, who led the riders at Laurel and Pimlico, was suspended for ten days, leaving the field open to Longden. The latter will pilot the horses belonging to Mrs. E. Denemark at Florida this winter.

George Alexandra will ship 26 horses at the close of Bowie to Florida for a winter racing campaign. They are the horses belonging to the Medway Stable. Alexandra raced in Canada and New England this year and won a considerable number of races.

★ ★ ★ ★

J. H. Louchheim's Pompoon will have another try at a rich stake. He will be prepared for the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap run next February. With this object in view the colt was shipped to California with the hope that he will show some of his real form.

Red Wings Purchase Williams for Hornets

Detroit, Nov. 15 (AP).—Manager Jack Adams of the Detroit Red Wings announced tonight the sale of Burr Williams, captain and defense man for the Wings' Pittsburgh Hornet farm team last season, to the New Haven club of the International-American Hockey League. Adams said the sale price was $2,500.

Pat Meehan, A New Star, On Mat Card

Irish Sensation Meets Maynard Thursday at Turner's.

A new wrestling face—strictly new—will be presented local mat addicts Thursday night at Turner's Arena on the card featuring Cliff Olsen, the Minnesota Swede, and Ray Steele, the California Clouter.

The newcomer is Patrick (Pat) Meehan, who came over from County Cork, Ireland, about six months ago, and has been building up a terrific reputation for himself on the Pacific Coast.

Promoter Joe Turner, having heard about Meehan's mat feats, has booked him for a special 30-minute bout with Joe Maynard, the rolypoly rough New Yorker.

Meehan is flying East for the first time. He is said to be a powerfully built grappler with an abundance of mat science.

Thursday night's show also will present Gino Garibaldi, the No. 1 Italian wrestler, in a semiwindup role against Reb Russell, the Wild Bull from Texas. Garibaldi hasn't appeared at the Arena in a year, during which time he has had heavy billing on the Coast. Their match will be a 45-minute time limit.

Turner also announced the return of Jack Hader, Kansas, for a 30-minute tussle with Stan Sokolis.

With Snead gaining consistently for the first time and aided by a 6-yard pass, Lynham to Stanton, Western slowly pushed the ball to the 3, where Don Niklason plunged over the goal after he apparently had been halted on the scrimmage line. Lynham's placement try was blocked by Kemp.

With the exception of the touchdown, Western did not threaten. Its passing attack was unable to function with customary efficiency because Kemp, Stange and others covered receivers so closely that the aerials usually never reached their hands.

The defensive work of Joe Kobre, tackle; Wade, end, and Kemp was outstanding for Eastern, as was the play of McCracken, Price and Snead for the losers.

Eli-Crimson Clash Tops East's Card

By Bill Boni,
Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Nov. 16.—There's always talk, in every football season, about giving the game back to the boys. This Saturday the boys will forestall all such campaigns by giving most of the games on the Nation's slate back to the old grads.

They'll be pouring into Cambridge, Mass., and Portland, Oreg., Minneapolis and Columbus, Ga., from all corners this week-end to witness renewals of gridiron rivalries with a combined age that makes Methuselah look like a kid in rompers.

Topping the list is the fifty-sixth revival of the Harvard-Yale festivities. The Harvards and the Yales have been having at each other ever since 1875, and the record now stands Yale, 32; Harvard, 17; and 6 ties. But every time the boys in blue and crimson get together, it's just as if they were starting out all over again.

Rivalries Are Old.

The year 1900 was still the far-off end of the century when a lot of this Saturday's rivalries were born before crowds that wouldn't fill a good-sized substitutes' bench these days. There will be at least one of those battles whose origin goes back to the gas light era in every section of the land.

The East, in addition to the Harvard-Yale clash that will fill the Harvard stadium for the first time since 1931, will present such tradition-festooned meetings as Syracuse and Colgate, who started in '91; Lehigh and Lafayette, rivals 70 times since 1C84; Pittsburgh and Penn State, who go back to 1893, and Princeton and Navy, who started a year earlier.

Northwestern and Notre Dame, clashing for the seventeenth time this week-end, had their first scrap in 1889. But Indiana and Purdue, fighting for the "old oaken bucket;" Minnesota and Wisconsin, Illinois and Chicago, and Michigan and Ohio State, though they got later starts, have been meeting with much greater regularity.

Georgia-Auburn Clash.

The South will take out of the moth-balls the time-honored debate between Georgia and Auburn, which got under way in '92, and in which the Bulldogs hold a mere one-game edge.

Similarly paper-thin margins separate Oregon and Washington, and Oregon State and Washington State, who meet in two of the Pacific Coast's headliners. The West's big scrap, between undefeated California and yeast-rising Stanford, will see the Indians, beaten the last three times, seeking their twenty-first triumph in a series that started in '92 and in which California has won 13, while 8 have been tied.

Intersectional games—such as those between Fordham and St. Mary's, Arkansas and George Washington and U. C. L. A. and Southern Methodist—also are on tap. But all of these riyalries are rank upstarts. In the main, Saturday's program will be given over to the founding fathers and their 1937 offspring.

Bowling Records Topple at Arcadia

Paul Harrison led the Cool Fountain to victory in the Columbia Heights Bowling League at the Arcadia last night, establishing a season individual set record and helping to post a new all-time league team set record.

Cool Fountain's 1,926, five pins better than the record established in 1931, was the feature of the night, although Lorrain Gulli established a season record in the Washington Ladies' League, rolling a 361 individual set.

Hoyas, Terps All 'Excited' Over Saturday's Big Game

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Feverishly preparing for their game Saturday, which marks the peak of the collegiate football season, locally, the Georgetown and Maryland squads rested again yesterday, confining themselves to brief blackboard lectures by their respective coaches.

From all outward appearances this game, which is expected to attract upwards of 20,000 customers to Griffith Stadium, is taking on a daffy complex. A couple of international chess teams warming up for a telegraphic match couldn't assume a more indifferent attitude with more success. Maryland refuses to have its mental equilibrium disturbed by the bear stories emanating from Georgetown and the Hoyas, by gad, are too busy playing touch football to give a derisive hoot about the Terps. It's quite disconcerting for the experts.

Brain Trust at Work.

But way down below the surface some heavy masterminding is going on among the rival coaching staffs. What one camp doesn't know about the other isn't worth knowing, coining a phrase. And the gentlemen in charge have exhausted every means at their command to check up on their rivals. They can tell you what size shoes Jim Meade wears; whether Tom Keating takes cream in his coffee; that the nail on Joe Mellendick's big toe (left foot) is bruised; that Charley Weidinger needs a haircut.

If anybody thinks Maryland isn't going into action with an eight-column mental picture of the Hoyas' strong and weak points, or that Georgetown isn't equipped fully as well, they are slightly mistaken. Outwardly all is calm, but privately the boys are working like G-Men in a kidnapping case.

An early suspicion that the teams will employ wide-open football is now a confirmed fact, although battle plans are subject to change without notice. Maryland demonstrated its willingness to gamble on fourth down passes deep in its own territory against Penn State last week, while Georgetown was throwing a wet, slippery ball around with abandon against New York University. If the fans don't get a couple of runs for their money they are at least going to get plenty of passing for it.

Big Celebration.

Meanwhile, preparations are under way among the students for pregame celebrations which include bonfires on both campuses. There also may be a bit of horseplay similar to last year's, when Georgetown painted Maryland's bronze terrapin in front of Ritchie Coliseum blue and gray, while the Terps swashed Georgetown streets with various slogans in white paint.

Disaster almost overtook the rival factions before that hectic night was over. Maryland students, learning of the indignity their Terp was subjected to, hastily organized a raiding party to retaliate. The group, about 35 students, ended up at No. 7 Police Precinct after giving the coppers a merry chase. Georgetown students eventually returned them to College Park, but it was several days before the bronze terrapin shed his unnatural colors and Georgetown's streets resumed their normal gray.

Eddie Alzac And Galiano Battle Here

First of All-Star Series Slated for Monday Night at Turner's

Announcing the first of a series of all-star boxing shows to be presented each month, Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn yesterday signed K. O. Eddie Alzac, up-and-coming young New York lightweight, and Pete Galiano, rugged Baltimore scrapper, for one of the eight-rounders next Monday night at Turner's Arena.

Alzac, a tall, lanky 20-year-old who is constructed along the lines of Kid Chocolate, appeared at the Arena a few weeks ago and knocked out Billy Bullock, fast-moving District lightweight, in three rounds. In this match, billed as the semi-windup, Alzac punched a la Henry Armstrong—that is to say, he didn't throw those fists far, but they certainly packed plenty of dynamite. Bullock was floored no less than five times before the match was stopped.

Handled by Irving Cohen, popular New York manager, Alzac rang up his 30th victory of the season Saturday night at the Rockland Palace, New York, by trouncing the then undefeated George Henry, in eight rounds. He has not lost a fight this season, having scored 16 knockouts.

Galiano, tough Italian boy, has fought among others Eddie Cool, Pete Galato and Howard Scott, and is quite popular here. Last winter he staged many a stirring scrap with Irish Johnny Dean. In his return to his local ring wars two weeks ago Galiano whipped Jackie Giacalone, New Yorker, in a thrilling match.

Joe Bunsa, Cardinal Star, Is Seriously Ill

Joe Bunsa, Catholic University gridman and boxer, was reported in serious condition last night at Emergency Hospital, where he underwent a major surgical operation several days ago. All of his teammates have offered to donate their blood for a transfusion, which, hospital authorities fear, will be necessary.

Bunsa was operated on for an abscess just below the kidney after spending several days in the hospitals while physicians vainly attempted to diagnose his case. The lad played end on the grid team, and as a middleweight was one of the boxing team's outstanding members.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Nov. 16.—Sudden upturns in Chicago wheat values took place at the last today after the market earlier had nervously shifted its trend several times.

Tax Barriers Are a Threat To State Trade

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Nov. 16.—Preservation of the great free trade area represented by continental United States is seriously threatened by the growth of barriers to interstate commerce, says the New York Trust Co. in its recent issue of The Index. State sales taxes supplemented by use taxes, chain store taxation, establishment of State ports of entry, the proposed Federal wages and hours bill, and the possible establishment of regional authorities in seven flood control areas, are cited as actual or potential obstacles to the unhampered flow of commerce across State lines.

"While each one of the taxes, prohibitions and proposed legislative acts may have been actuated by worthy motives and afford certain specific benefits," the report states, "the broad national interest has been obscured. Individual States might feel compelled to produce locally substitutes for the goods whose prices would be forced up by such measures. The end would be a sectionalism equivalent to the nationalistic policies adopted by European countries to protect their industries from foreign competition, over higher prices to be paid by the public, and the gradual breakdown of the policy of liberalism and of the nation-wide free market which have played such vital roles in our national development.

"This trend toward sectionalism, directly opposing all our previous national history following the War Between the States, also contradicts the desire expressed by the Administration for national unity in internal and international affairs. Such an anomaly—suggesting nothing so much as 'failure to see the forest for the trees'—carries with it the implication for the Federal Government that the country's best interests would be served through stricter adherence to measures for the benefit of the Nation as a whole."

Stocks Lower in Moderate Trading as Trade News Fails to Stimulate; U. S. Bonds Up.

New York, Nov. 16.—Stocks dragged through a rather gloomy day, finishing lower on a turnover of around 1,400,000 shares. United States bonds were dull and commodities were steady. December wheat closed three-quarters of a cent higher, at 89⅞ cents a bushel.

Stocks at no time looked promising. Their opening prices, although generally lower by a fraction to a point, proved to be the day's best, but around noon a moderate rally brought the price level well above its mid-morning low point. Declines took place in every instance on light offerings, suggesting that even if, as President Roosevelt assured the country yesterday, liquidation of speculative accounts has been completed, that of investment holdings is continuing.

Price Changes Narrower.

Price fluctuations between sales were narrower, in contrast with the sharp changes a few weeks ago, when much smaller volume was necessary for similar losses. That evidence of steadier nerves in the market didn't seem to encourage much buying, nevertheless. Steel opened down 1½ points, at 55½, recovered to above the previous day's closing, sold under 55 in the afternoon, and then again hardened a little.

Chesapeake & Ohio softened nearly 2 points. Santa Fe lost 3 points. Chemicals, railroad equipments and metals dropped 1 to 3 points. Motors were slightly lower. Paper & Power preferred sank rapidly after announcement of two quarterly dividends and reduction of arrears to $1.25 a share. Before the announcement the shares were strong. Coca-Cola fell 7 points on a few sales. A handful of inactive stocks lurched heavily on small dealings.

Overnight thoughts on the President's message didn't get the market anywhere. Looking on the good side a section of Wall Street, opposed to New Deal policies, was inclined to concede that in the broad outlines of his ideas on business taxes the President had gone as far as any one could expect him to go, in view of the political desirability (from the President's point of view) of turning on his heel slowly. Assuming that to be the case the President, for all his piffle about tax lightening for small and weak business concerns while allowing the strong companies to grow weaker, may actually be willing to go a good distance toward tax adjustment.

Trade Still Sagging.

The current tendency is to transfer hope for relief from the President to Congress and that hope may indeed be justified. Most persons nevertheless will continue to count on nothing until they see it actually accomplished. Meanwhile, business activity continues to decline. Recession is most noticeable in the steel industry, the leather trades and the textile industry. Activity for a long time has been low enough in building construction, and the current uplift in building construction securities plainly is based on hope for something to come from Federal aid to building, plus perhaps some long-distance expectation of lower costs.

Acting in its capacity as a reflector of business conditions the stock market is quite unlikely to advance for a while, for the near future promises further statistical evidence of falling trade. Those who count on an early end to the business decline base their optimism with regard to the market, such as it is, upon the market's forecasting proclivities. By the same token a sizable further fall in stock prices would add to the fears of a serious depression.

Poor Budget!

News of the day was mostly that of dividend payments, partly in response to the penalty tax and of reduction in employment. In that connection the drive for the unemployment census is rapidly taking on the character of a national circus in which each group of enumerators will strive to turn in bigger and better figures than its rivals. Men and women, whether employed or not, doubtless will find it difficult to say no to the census takers, with the result that, counting the children and the temporarily idle and those on vacation at the moment, the figures on unemployment should look big enough to suit any administration seeking for an excuse for another huge appropriation for relief. Such an outcome, especially with another election approaching, looks to be far more "definite" than the 1938-39 budget balance.

Thick and Thin.

The thick-and-thin market controversy ball has been lost in the fog of selling of a nature plain enough to all, i. e., that based on a business recession. Liquidation of the sort that has gone on all summer and autumn has no close relation to SEC regulation or to anything else except those things which "we planned" that way. The Roosevelt bear market, which began last March, is in many respects similar to the Roosevelt bear market of 1907, and that one was influenced by Government policies directed against business rather than against stock market trading practices. However, the statistician probably can find interest in looking at the figures and making complicated computations of percentages and ratios.

No Faster Pace.

In its current monthly bulletin the stock exchange publishes figures and charts prepared along the lines of President Gay's recent addresses tending to show that since the SEC the market has grown thinner and that it requires less selling or buying volume to move stocks widely than formerly was the case. On the basis of figures used that seems to be true, but it would be just as easy to say that the figures proved something else. The market this summer could take less stock without moving than it could in the 1929 break, but in 1929, without SEC rgulation, it could take much less stock without moving than it could 10 years and 20 years previously. The market has been growing thinner, but the progress toward that condition does not appear to have increased with the new regulations.

Necessary.

What probably has taken place is that the proportion of public dealings to total sales volume has been rising, and the public trading tends to pull apart the bid and asked prices. The public trades for points and definite sums and the floor traders are content with fractions and often prefer a stock in which outsiders are not likely to step in and take them by surprise. With the rise in public interest the price fluctuations have grown sharper, it may be argued and with just as good reason as to assume that the trouble has been the retreat of the floor leader under the fire of the SEC. The old-style thick markets with large volume needed to create wide fluctuations, can be regained easily enough by the simple process of excluding public participation, but that would eliminate the sole raison d'etre of the stock exchange, which is to tap public savings for business enterprise. The stock exchange would not wish to be in the position of parents who regard children as a nuisance.

Hormel Packer Firm Report Earning Loss

Chicago, Nov. 16 (AP).—George A. Hormel & Co., of Austin, Minn., first of the meat packing companies to report earnings for the industry's 1937 fiscal year which ended October 30, today announced net earnings declined while sales increased.

Consolidated net income for the year was $767,387, after surtax, equivalent to $1.43 a common share, compared with $846,711, or $1.50 a share, the preceding year.

Railroad Gross Is Only 2.7% Above Year Ago

Net Income for This Year Likely to Result in Substantial Drop.

New York, Nov. 16.—On the basis of the showing during the first eight months and prospective conditions during the remainder of the year, annual operating revenues of the railroads in the United States promise to show in 1937, for the fourth consecutive year, an extension of the upward movement which began in 1924 after the severe 1930-1933 slump, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute.

This year will show, however, a very small rate of expansion. The outlook is that operating revenues will amount to $4,164,000,000, as compared with $4,053,000,000 last year, an increase of only 2.7 per cent.

Operating revenue this year will consequently still be far below the pre-depression figure of $6,280,000,000 in 1929, with a decrease amounting to 33.7 per cent. They will represent the recovery of only a third of the ground lost in the four-year recession after 1929.

Moreover, the present outlook is that the increase in operating expenses from 1936 to 1937 will be relatively greater than the gain in revenues and that operating income will consequently decline to $595,000,000 this year from $667,000,000 last year. Operating income will thus be less than half the 1929 amount of $1,252,000,000 and will not be greatly in excess of the $326,000,000 in 1932, the lowest figure of the depression.

After the deduction of such items as interest and rental charges, the railroads' net income promises to amount to only $91,000,000 this year as against $165,000,000 last year and $897,000,000 in 1929.

B. & O. Revenues.

Baltimore, Nov. 16 (AP).—Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, told the annual stockholders meeting today operating revenue of the railroad for 1937 was estimated at $172,500,000. This compared with operating revenue of $169,000,000 last year, an increase of about 2 per cent. Freight revenues will be increased 1.6 per cent over last year and passenger revenues 6 per cent, according to the estimate.

The meeting approved the annual report for 1936 and the purchase of $5,183,000 of Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh consolidated 4½ per cent bonds for $4,427,000, which will place that road in a position to retire at maturity, September 1, 1937, a like amount of its general mortgage 5 per cent bonds. The bonds acquired were used by the B. & O., the stockholders were told, for a loan of $5,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

New Life Insurance Gains 5.7% for Year

New York, Nov. 16 (AP).—Production of new life insurance in the United States in October was 2 per cent less than October, 1936, but the total for the first ten months of this year was 5.7 per cent more than the corresponding period, it was shown today in the report of the Association of Life Insurance Presidents.

The new paid-up business of 40 companies having 82 per cent of life insurance outstanding in all legal reserve companies, the report said, amounted to $701,038,000 in October against $715,261,000 for the same month last year. The ten-month total was $7,546,739,000, against $7,137,508,000 a year ago.

Tulsa, Nov. 16 (AP).—Average production of crude oil in the United States increased 9,919 barrels daily during the week ended November 13 to an average of 3,547,122 barrels daily, the Oil and Gas Journal reported today.

Oklahoma decreased 25,800 barrels daily to a total of 556,575. East Texas increased 851 barrels daily to 485,748, and the State of Texas increased 2,302 to an average of 1,429,644. Louisiana increased 3,799 to 237,449, California was up 17,950 to 710,150, and Kansas increased 19,075 barrels daily to 193,300.

Business Failures Gain.

New York, Nov. 16 (AP).—Business failures in the United States for the five-day week ended November 10 totaled 172 against 162 in the preceding five-day period and 166 in the comparable week last year, also a short week, Dun & Bradstreet reported today.

PROCESS OF ELIMINATION

Regardless of the current position of general business the relative outlook for specific industries is constantly shifting. The earning power of some enterprises may be rising at a time when particular conditions are depressing the income of certain other industries. Only by a constant process of elimination and replacement may the investor capitalize these conflicting trends. Information available at this office may prove helpful in analyzing the industrial outlook.

Miss Scott, 73, Sister of Peace Advocate, Dies

Miss Jeanette Scott, 73, painter and sister of James Brown Scott, lawyer, educator and secretary of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, died yesterday at her home in Skaneateles, N. Y., after an illness of three months.

A native of Kincardine, Ontario, Miss Scott was a frequent visitor here and was in Washington last spring.

After attending the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, Miss Scott studied in Paris and at that time exhibited paintings in the Salon de Champs de Mars. Following her studies in Paris she returned to America and joined the faculty of Syracuse University as a professor of painting. Later appointed head of the Syracuse painting department, she was honored with the first degree of doctor of fine arts ever awarded by the university in 1927.

Miss Scott made a number of paintings of her brother, one of which now hangs in the Georgetown University Law School Building.

Besides her brother, she is survived by two sisters, Miss Mary Scott, medical diagnostician and the first woman admitted to study under Pasteur in Paris, and Miss Margaret Scott, a graduate of the Sorbonne in Paris and former member of the faculty at Illinois and Syracuse Universities.

Mrs. Walker Dead; Burial Is Today

Mrs. Helen Whitman Walker, 67, wife of Maj. Gen. Kenzie W. Walker and resident of Washington since 1919, died late Sunday at her residence, 2540 Massachusetts avenue northwest.

Born in Fitchburg, Mass., she married Gen. Walker in 1895, two years after he was graduated from West Point. A member of the Washington Club and St. Thomas' Church, Mrs. Walker was active in Army social circles.

As the wife of a young Army officer she experienced the thrills and dangers of empire building when she went with her husband to Zamboanga and Jolo in Cuba as a bride.

Following the World War, Gen. Walker entered the Army Finance Department here, retiring as chief of the department in 1928.

Surviving Mrs. Walker are her husband, a daughter, Mrs. Guerra Everett; two granddaughters, Helen Concha and Caroline Whitman Everett; a brother, Hobart A. Whitman, of Worcester, Mass., and a niece, Mrs. Herman Beukema, of West Point.

Funeral services will be held today at 11:30 a. m. at Fort Myer Chapel. Burial will be in Arlington National Cemetery.

Bob Burns Says—

I was readin' an article the other day that said that the old-fashioned girl makes the best housekeeper because she learned the art from her mother, while the modern girl has'ta start from taw, with nothin' to aid her but the cook book. I think there's a lot'ta truth in that but you have'ta give the modern girl credit for catchin' on quick and takin' advantage of every situation.

I had a friend that married one of them modern socialites and on her first day in the kitchen she was readin' the cook book and she turned to her husband and says "Honey, this housework isn't going to be so terrible. It says here that all you have to do to tell if the pudding is done is to stick a knife in the pudding and if the knife comes out clean, the pudding is done." Then she says "Not only that—if the knife comes out clean, I can stick all the silverware in the pudding."

Relief Refused 1,000 Persons Here in Month

Welfare Officials Report 200 Denied Aid Were Unemployable.

More than 1,000 persons, 200 of whom are unemployable, were refused public assistance in the District last month because of meager relief funds, according to the monthly report released yesterday by the public assistance division of the Welfare Board.

The agency has not been able to assist employable families and individuals since July, 1936, except for a short period last spring, because funds have been too limited to provide adequately even for unemployables, the report stated.

With a further reduction in funds for the fiscal year 1937-1938, it was necessary to further reduce the already "too small grant to unemployables," it said.

Since sufficient money is not available and a deficiency must not be incurred, the Board of Public Welfare decided to stress the social security program to make suitable provision for cases within the terms of the social security law rather than to spread the money among so many people that there is security for none.

An effort is being made to stabilize budgets for aid to dependent children and accept unemployables only to the limit of remaining funds, the report said.

Until budgets can be increased for aid to dependent children it was deemed advisable last month to close intake to all cases except those who meet social security requirements.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Fiordiligi ..... Grete Menzel
Dorabella ..... Hertha Glatz
Despina ..... Marisa Merlo
Ferrando ..... LaszloCsabay
Guglielmo ..... Ignio Zangheri
Alfonso ..... Alfred Hollander
Stage Director:
Eugen Schulz-Breiden

A thoroughly delightful performance of Mozart's neglected little masterpiece of baroque comedy was given by the Salzburg Opera Guild last evening in Constitution Hall to the pronounced satisfaction of a large audience. Despite all the disadvantages of staging on the shallow hemicycle, the adroit arrangement of reversible screens as backgrounds for the scenes and the neat timing of the action resulted in a smooth and rapid presentation in keeping with the pace of the farcical imbroglio.

The cast was composed of singers well trained and adequately versed in the Mozartian style, and if no one of the voices had superlative merit they were all agreeable both in intonation and flexibility. One noted particularly the balance and the blending of the voices, so essential to the succession of duets, trios, quartets, quintets and sextets which constitute a large part of the score.

"Cosi Fan Tutte" has given rise to considerable argument over the value of Lorenzo da Ponte's share. Wagner, of all people, declared that the libretto is bad and congratulated Mozart on concealing its deficiencies, while Edward Dent says that it is well-nigh perfect. Be the libretto poor or excellent, Mozart's setting of it produced the perfect type of opera buffa at its purest and most provocative. Taking a broad farce, he accentuated its theoretical character and its defiant attitude toward convention, while embuing it with charm.

The incredible situation of two young men taking leave of their fiancees for a supposed long absence and returning immediately to woo them in the guise of Albanian noblemen without their identities being recognized taxed the ingenuity of the composer. For what he had to treat was pretense within pretense. The theme, as Henri Gheon puts it, is "to be what one is not as though one were it; to think what one does not think as though one thought it; to love what one does not love as though one loved it."

The artificiality of the plot reminds one of the formal gardens of the eighteenth century with their fountains, grottoes, classical statues and make-believe ruins. It is exactly this beauty of artifice that is reflected in Mozart's music—in the grace of its arabesques, the fluidity of its lyric lines, the gentle freshness of the sentiment, and the skillful and subtle fantasy in the fusion of all the elements.

"Cosi Fan Tutte" is a masterwork of suavity and finesse, of tenderness and of voluptuous implications, and at the same time a masterpiece of ironic scorn at the fatuous actions of mankind. Beneath its gayety and its effervescent liveliness one detects an acidity that is none the less biting for being dissolved in a heady drink. It represents a society at once real and sham, keenly alive in its somewhat mechanical courtesy, delighted with its own ornate beauty and still laughing at itself because it sees the ridiculous side of its narcistic attitude.

If your kidneys are active and in good condition your life will be a healthier and happier one.

It's a good plan to give your kidneys a good cleaning once in a while with a wholesome, effective diuretic that can do you no harm.

Excess poisons and acid may segregate in the kidneys and help to cause an irritated bladder—with some people passage is difficult or scanty and often smarts and burns.

One good harmless diuretic that has proven its worth is GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules—right from Haarlem in Holland.

So if backache bothers—if you get nervous and irritable—if you have stiny spells—if you break your refreshing sleep by getting up often at night it may be that your kidneys need attention. Ask for and get GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules—the original—and for your own sake do not accept any imitations—35 cents at every drug store in America.—Adv.

Trade Treaty Between U. S., Britain Imminent; Political Meaning to Rival Economic Import

Although they undoubtedly will be separately announced and concluded, the forthcoming negotiations with Great Britain and the Dominions must be regarded as part of a co-ordinated plan. Indeed it is the British desire to act in concert with Australia, Canada, New Zealand and South Africa which has made the preliminary discussions so protracted.

English-Speaking Accord.

It is now almost a year since these were started between the British Embassy and the Department of State. During this period, and particularly during the sessions of the Imperial Conference in London early last summer, every angle of the proposed trade agreement with this country was discussed between the British Government and representatives of the Dominions.

These discussions have now reached a stage where they promise to make the Anglo-American trade agreement a stepping stone to one between the entire British Empire and the United States, though this would be concealed by the political necessity of concluding each agreement with a self-governnig British unit separately. The idea in both London and Washington is to swing the entire English-speaking world into a decisive accord for less hampered international trade. And this, Secretary Hull has often asserted, is the most secure road toward a stabilized peace.

Preliminary difficulties in the negotiations have been increased by the Ottawa Agreement of 1932, whereby Great Britain and the Dominions established an elaborate scheme of imperial preference, partly as an offset to the Smoot-Hawley tariff. The Ottawa Agreements have done less than nothing to increase the volume of world trade. But they have been fairly successful in giving the British Empire a larger share of that which is carried on.

Merger of Ottawa Pacts.

What is now foreshadowed is, in effect, a merger of the Ottawa agreements in a general trade accord between the English-speaking peoples, with the important distinction that whereas the Ottawa agreements were concluded at the expense of non-British nations, the treaties now contemplated will be inclusive in their benefits.

Agreement for reciprocal reduction of duties on a most-favored nation basis will, it is argued, benefit not merely the principals, but also, in Mr. Eden's words, "the whole world." The potential value of the pending accords in lessening present international tensions is one of the reasons why Secretary Hull is also so strongly behind them.

Much of the pressure for the Anglo-American trade agreement comes from the British dominions, particularly Canada. These growing countries feel that they need markets with more purchasing power than Great Britain herself can supply.

In Great Britain there is a strong element which hates to give up the principle of exclusive imperial preference, but since the installation of Neville Chamberlain as prime minister this school has lost ground. There is also an increasing conviction in England that the pending accord would have political advantages incomparably greater than any commercial sacrifices which might be entailed for Great Britain.

Debt Moral Recalled.

Indeed this has led to a feeling that the British negotiators may be unduly willing to make concessions in the close bargaining for tariff reductions which is now about to set in. It is pointed out that in 1923 Stanley Baldwin concluded a debt agreement with this country which, because of political considerations, was made very favorable to the United States. In the upshot that settlement proved too onerous for continuation by Great Britain. The British negotiators will bear this moral in mind.

On the other hand the Department of State is fully aware that a storm of opposition from American interests will arise as soon as the full import of the proposed trade treaty sinks in. Because it is now charged that these agreements are injurious to American agriculture, even though evidence to that effect is not imposing, the negotiators are demanding large British concessions for American farm produce. This, of course, is not agreeable to the dominions. They would later unquestionably expect some compensation for any immediate contraction of their British markets.

In the technical language of the Department of State the announcement now momentarily expected is only one of "contemplation of negotiation" of a trade agreement with Great Britain. It will be a preliminary announcement, to serve notice on interested business groups that suggestions from them are in order. According to routine the next step is a formal notice of "intention to negotiate," at which time there will be made public the list of products on which the United States will consider granting concessions to Great Britain.

As a matter of fact, however, tentative agreement on a number of the products in which mutual concessions will be considered has already been reached between the Administration and the British government. This list is of course subject to alteration to the extent that a convincing case of threatened injury can be made out by protected groups, in either country. But in prereparing the tentative lists now drafted representatives of both countries have done everything possible to foresee and make due allowance for the protests which are anticipated

It is revealing no secret to say that both Washington and London expect strong protests. But it is pointed out that if the agreement is to mean anything in the way of liberating international trade, protests are inevitable.

Even when protests are of a somewhat perfunctory nature—for the record rather than from conviction—they will be given detailed examination and investigation. It is further pointed out that announcement of "contemplation of negotiation" has been delayed until Congress is in session here, and Parliament sitting in London, in order that there may be no excuse for any charge of furtive intent in negotiating the agreement.

To Halt War Drift.

In defending the negotiations the Administration will undoubtedly point to the slow recuperation of international trade, the consequent rapid growth of economic nationalism, the development of dictatorships as the only way to run self-contained economies, and the increasing threat to the very existence of democratic government which these dictatorships now represent.

It will be pertinently asked whether such governments as those of Hitler and Mussolini are the only ones able to strengthen each other's hands by swift and effective cooperation and whether it is in the nature of democracy to be unable to work in the long-range interests of all because of the immediate self-interest of a few.

There is no doubt that the Department of State sincerely believes that this country's greatest contribution to the cause of peace, and perhaps the only one completely practical at the moment, is to join with the British Commonwealth of Nations in the move for lowering trade barriers, thereby consolidating economic recovery and opposing the drift towards another world war.

World Turning Point.

The same opinion, evidently, is dominant in Great Britain, where a Tory government is preparing to fly in the face of British imperial interests in order to secure a far-reaching trade agreement with the United States. The cabinets of both Premier Chamberlain and President Roosevelt, it is understood, are completely unified in their intention to put the contemplated agreement across. And both regard it as at least potentially a turning point in the steady drift towards a completely anarchic world.

This does not mean, however, that those who take the rap in either country will be willing to regard the proposed agreement in a philosophic, long-range light. Between the two sets of protected interests and their respective governments there will be unity of opinion only on the importance and magnitude of what is contemplated. From this unity very diverse conclusions will be drawn.

The curtain is thus about to rise on a drama which promises to preoccupy the people of the entire English-speaking world. And nowhere will the unpredictable course of that drama be watched with more attention than in the dictatorships, where final proof of the inability of democracies to co-operate is badly wanted by those who give the marching orders.

Wallace Cites Jefferson as First Court Foe

Unpacking Effort Brought Censure, New Dealer Points Out.

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 16 (AP).—Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace described Thomas Jefferson in a speech today as a greater hater of the Supreme Court than any President before or since.

Speaking at the University of Virginia, founded by Jefferson, Wallace said that "one of the first moves of the Jeffersonians when coming into power was to unpack the Federal courts which had been packed by Adams with aristocratic Federalists just before Jefferson came into power."

"As a result of the unpacking effort," the speaker continued, "Jefferson was accused in the most violent terms of wanting to destroy the Federal judiciary and subject all things to his will."

Secretary Wallace spoke in connection with the 75th anniversary of the establishment of the Land Grant College System and the United States Department of Agriculture. He was introduced by Dr. Julian A. Burruss, president of Virginia Tech, who said Thomas Jefferson was not the father of the Land Grant College, but its prophet.

Secretary Wallace described Jefferson as a pioneer in farming, education and democracy.

"While apparently he (Jefferson) got a great joy out of building and inventing various contrivances, he evidently got his greatest pleasure out of agricultural experimenting," the speaker said.

As an educator, the speaker continued, Jefferson believed "educated farmers were the stuff out of which democracy could be built. To that faith in the capacities of common men to govern themselves in the light of the facts around them," Wallace said.

"He hated the Supreme Court with a greater hate than any President before or since, and there have been many good haters. Jefferson, with his agriculutural Virginia background, no doubt thought that his activities as President were fundamentally sound. But New England, with her industrial trading and banking activities, was terribly angered by them."

Turning to present times, Wallace said "We can only guess what Jefferson would say and do today . . . .

"Somehow I am inclined to think if Jefferson were to come back today he would adapt himself to the changed situation with remarkable skill, but hold fast to one thing above everything else—his belief in democracy."

Dr. Burruss, after praising Jefferson as a pioneer in thought for agricultural education, said land grant colleges are now recognized as having rendered services of "value beyond estimation."

Wife Held After Man Is Slain In Fight Over Injuries to Son was all I meant to do; just scare him.

"But he thought I was serious and tried to take it away from me. We scuffled and the gun went off and it shot him in the left side. I caught him before he fell."

She said the children ran into the house then and helped carry Hughes to the family car. They started toward Alexandria and the hospital, where little Johnny lay, Hughes fully conscious.

Died at Hospital.

"He begged me not to take him to a hospital. I told him he was dying and please don't do it; please don't die.

"He said he wasn't going to die and he was alive when we got him to the hospital. He died afterward."

Mrs. Hughes was arrested in Alexandria and taken to Fairfax Courthouse. Before she was led away, she knew her husband was dead.

"I didn't want it to happen," she wailed. "I didn't want him to die. I just tried to scare him."

After an autopsy last night, Dr. William B. Wilkins, acting coroner at Alexandria, said the bullet entered Hughes' body in the left breast, apparently passed about 2 inches under the heart, and lodged under the skin near the left of the spine. He found the right lung and the abdomen filled with blood, a condition he said he was at a loss to explain at once unless the bullet struck a rib and took an erratic course before lodging in the man's back.

The weather-beaten home where Hughes was shot contains a little country grocery store, a replica of thousands in rural sections of the South. Mrs. Hughes operated this little store; she opened it two years ago and its meager income padded that from her husband's cleaning shop in Alexandria.

Leaves Five Children.

Of their five children, one is married. She is Mrs. Mildred Hughes Emerson, 20, who lives at Fort Hunt, near which the Hughes home stands. The others are Virginia, 16; Jean, 14; Johnny, 13, and Elizabeth, 3.

Virginia Hughes was not at home when her father was shot. And, of course, neither was Johnny. He was seriously ill with head injuries.

Hughes, a native of Columbia, S. C., had been in business in Alexandria nearly 20 years. He was a member of Alexandria Post, No. 24, American Legion, and Russell Mitchell Post, No. 600, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The Hughes were married 21 years ago, when she was 14. A year after their marriage, Carl Hughes enlisted in the Army for the World War, left his bride at Fort Hunt and went to France. Together again, they began building toward independence and raising their family.

Tragedy was something apart from their lives all those years until it struck them twice in 24 hours.

Farmers to Resist Meat Strike, Chief Warns Auto Union

"American farmers are shocked" at the United Automobile Workers of America campaign "to withhold consumption of meat in an effort to reduce prices," President Edward A. O'Neal of the American Farm Bureau Federation yesterday telegraphed Homer Martin, U. A. W. A. president.

"Is this an invitation for American farmers to take similar action against products produced by C. I. O. union labor?" he continued, with reference to newspaper reports that Committee for Industrial Organization unions had been asked to join in a drive to cut meat consumption.

"Factory wages are more than 20 per cent in excess of 1929 level and retail food prices including meat are nearly 20 per cent less than during same period. National welfare demands a balance as between agriculture, labor and industry, and American farmers will resist by whatever means necessary any efforts to aggravate the present disparities."
